G. BOYERS'

No. 148 Chartres Street,

(Corner of Conti Street, Bergundy street.)

THIS Institution, the oldest scholastic establishment in New Orleans, is well known and highly distinguished for the success which has accompanied it ever since its foundation; a considerable number of pupils who have quitted it to enter on the great scene of life, have already acquired some distinction in the various avocations to which they have devoted themselves.

The range of studies which engage the attention of the pupils extends over all the branches of learning which are necessary to a useful, polite and finished education; from primary instruction to the more abstruse subjects which especially the province of a classical course. Discipline is necessary to quicken in the youthful mind a due perception of the duties incumbent on it in its future relations with society, is a conspicuous feature of the establishment, being at the same time severe and considerate, whilst the solicitude of the Principal regarding the moral training of the youths committed to his charge, is, though strict, yet paternal.

The English language, daily becoming more and more evident, as of the greatest possible importance to all living in this community, is, in Boyers' Institution, attended to with more than ordinary care, the Professors engaged in this branch being gentlemen of undoubted attainments and long accustomed to tuition.
