MISCELLANEOUS.

A Troop of Wandering Gypsies in Philadelphia.

(From the Philadelphia Telegraph, July 30.)

During the early part of June the inhabitants of the rural section of our city were startled by the advent of a large caravan of gypsies. They came from the direction of Baltimore, and their march was like that of a small army. The first part, consisting of some eighty men, women and children with twenty wagons, came on the 7th of June, and pitched their encampment on the large level lot of ground situated on the south side of Haverford street, between Fifty fifth and Fifty sixth streets. The second party, numbering the same number of people, but with sixteen wagons, arrived two or three days later. Both parties appeared to agree among themselves very harmoniously. As the weather was so very warm and pleasant during the nights, they only pitched about five or six tents, the rest sleeping in their wagons or around on the grass. They had with them quite an assortment of fine horses some of which they offered for sale to the farmers around, and others they took down to West Philadelphia to dispose of. Their wagons were fitted up in good and comfortable style, and in some cases quite elegant. One of them, indeed, was fitted up in a manner that would do credit to an upholsterer, being extended over the sides and provided with bertha. This, we believe, was the one occupied by the Queen and her family. They all appeared to be in good circumstances as far as money was concerned, and acted in perfect good faith with all with whom they had dealings, except in regard to fortune-telling, in which the traditional roguery of the race would crop out.

The Queen of the Gypsies, Lydia Palmer, was a tall and fine looking woman. She appeared to be regarded with great respect, although her authority among her subjects was not very great. She was considered one of the shrewdest of the whole of them in that line. On ceremonious occasions she dressed very splendidly, as did many of her subjects. She wore a rich white satin dress, heavily embroidered in the most elegant manner, a beautiful [illegible] circular or sack, also covered by embroidery and a straw hat trimmed around with a silken rope. Among the men there were no distinctive dresses, and there was nothing to distinguish them from the citizens of the neighborhood but their dark complexion and gypsy or black hair. On ordinary occasions the women wore plain calico dresses, with sacks of the same.

In their business transactions they were open-handed and liberal. Everything was paid for as it was bought, without question. The only drawback in this respect was the women. They would go around telling fortunes, and if the people would not submit to be duped, they would threaten them. There was one case in particular that was told us. One of the Gypsy women went into a house in West Philadelphia and asked to tell the fortune of the mistress. She consented. At the same time she did not intend to pay the Gypsy for her trouble. After finishing, the latter demanded a dollar as her fee. When the woman refused to pay, Nothing daunted, the Gypsy snatched up a soup tureen, lying near by, and walked off with it. The next morning she reappeared at the house with a lot of dirty clothes, and told the same woman that the tureen she took was not worth the services she had rendered her, and that if she did not wash the clothes and have them done when she called for them, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, of the same day, she would put a spell on her. The woman was frightened that she immediately sent out and got a washerwoman, and had them done in the time specified.

Among themselves they appeared to be contented and not quarrelsome, although they [illegible] to outsiders. Before the Fourth of July they agreed among them, selves that there should be no firing off of guns, pistols, or crackers. During the night of the 3d, however, some of the children fired off a pistol, over the heads of the horses who were corralled in the encampment, causing a great disturbance among them. This was the occasion for a fight on the Fourth, which alarmed the neighbors, and they sent word to the police, who came and ordered them off. They got their traps together on the 5th and left peaceably, and went as far as Sixty fifth and Vine streets, [illegible] city line. Here they pitched their camp again.

For a while things went on smoothly enough, but they could not keep from quarrelling among themselves and they were finally compelled to clear out of the city limits altogether. They traveled westward, and are now in Chester county. Some of them say they are going to California. They are true gypsies, and have all the features and customs of that singular people. They are generally well to do, and [illegible] of a fine [illegible] some of the [illegible] handsome [illegible] appearance [illegible] be [illegible] for them [illegible] very [illegible] beauty so peculiar to their tribe.

Prevention and Early Treatment of Cholera

Whatever there may be question of the efficacy of some of the various specifics, we would not discourage the use of certain known articles which in their general effects are safe and salutary. Among these we may mention [illegible] Dr. McClintock, physician to the Belfast District Asylum, in the Dublin Medical Press, has an opening [illegible] which we have to be that often made [illegible] cholera [illegible] treated. There is a therapeutic [illegible] to certain [illegible] with the symptoms of cholera [illegible] the early recourse to [illegible]. The disease broke out in the asylum with startling suddenness and forty of the inmates very rapidly perished. Entirely convinced, however, of the value of prevention, it occurred to Dr. McClintock that if he could not only arrest but anticipate the premonitory diarrhea, much might be done to check the disease. Accordingly he prepared at once some dilute sulphuric acid, of whose general efficacy in the treatment of cholera he had had an extensive experience. Without waiting for the preliminary diarrhea he gave to every inmate of the establishment a teaspoonful of the acid, diluted with sweetened water. The effect was that the cases of the disease having run their course, no other instance of the malady occurred. The same writer continues his remarks in the following confident language with reference to the therapy of dilute sulphuric acid: "I firmly believe after and always neglecting no sanitary precaution [illegible] would make it virtually master of the situation and would render the ravages of the cholera [illegible] than [illegible] of the past."

Without adopting to their full extent these over sanguine anticipations of Doctor McCormac, we would say it is [illegible] the instruction of our readers that the dilute sulphuric acid has long been prized as a mild refrigerant and astringent. It excites the appetite, promotes digestion, and checks night-sweats, hemorrhages and diarrhea. It may be given in doses of from ten to thirty drops, three times a day, in a wineglass of sweet [illegible] or sweetened water. In the proportion of a teaspoonful or a dram to half a pint of water sweetened, it makes a pleasant drink in feverish states of the system. The dose of vitriolic acid is a quite similar preparation. The dose is the same, or in the sulphuric acid, and it is [illegible] the same virtues. In the use of both of these fluid it is necessary to protect the teeth, by taking it through a quill or [illegible] rinsing the mouth after with water. Glass and earthenware vessels should be the one used for holding the acid. On other good authority we are told that in a majority of cases of diarrhea, a little ginger tea with a few grains of carbonate of soda with attention to diet and rest is all that is required. In all cases we must renew this injunction to the individual that [illegible] be down, and as far as possible take entire rest from the very beginning of the disease.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Chinese Ridicule of English Sports.

There is an almost ludicrous account in a recent article in the London Times of the surprise we had almost said the scorn—with which the Chinese at Shanghai have perceived the introduction of English sports inaugurated. It is said that when a grand ball was given on board the admiral's ship of an English fleet at Alexandria, in honor of a visit from the Pacha of Egypt, that prince, after admiring greatly the beauties of the dance and the gracefulness of the dancers, confessed there was one thing that did astonish him, it was, that distinguished officers and ladies should like to fatigue themselves in that way for nothing. For his part, he was thankful that he had slaves whom he could see dance whenever he chose, without himself going through the labors of the motion.

In China there is the same astonishment felt at the shooting, cricket, boating and racing of the English and Americans. What amusement can be found in getting out boats from England at great expense, and rowing them ourselves, and going up rivers to walk home many miles for the sake of shooting game, is to them unaccountable and a proof of outside barbarianism. To throw a ball at three sticks, while another beats it off and a third runs after it, seems a proof of madness. Horse racing, chasing a pig with a greasy tail, climbing a greasy pole, are regarded as fine fun by the English, but with utter contempt by the Chinese. It is also quite clear that this sort of physical inferiority is the mark, if not the cause, of that general diminution of national power that makes the Eastern nations fall so easily and so naturally under the sway of the Western, whom, through the hardy privations which the great active contests of life generate, and which repeated emigrations have necessitated, have become a superior race in all their powers.

Other things being equal, strength and greatness of mind will be very much in proportion to vigor of body. The power of persistence and long continued, patient thought by a single mind in a given direction, will be very much in proportion to the power of long-enduring, bodily fatigue. Strength of will and the resolution to overcome all obstacles will, in like manner, be greatly in proportion to physical health and vigor, so that a few hours sleep will often give resolution to the timid and wavering, while great fatigue of body enervates the mind. In like manner, delicacy of body is greatly connected with delicacy of mind. Hence it is that all their instincts, perceptions, emotions and actions, women are so much finer than men, and all of both sexes become coarse in their tastes in proportion to that of their exercises and employments and health.

In every motion there are two things to be considered, and only two—discretion and force. Upon the delicacy of organization depends the perception and accurate regulation of the direction of all our motions, but upon the strength of constitution, the force, energy, perseverance, and final success of all exertions amid obstacles seem greatly to depend. This it is which makes the English and American races so superior in carrying their point among all the Eastern nations. And among the great means of keeping up that superiority are habits of physical advancement, kept up by means of athletic exercises which interest and excite the mind in connection with the body. There is no doubt but that mental exercise strengthens the body as much perhaps as bodily exercise the mind, for the effects are mutually reactive. That which deteriorates the body deteriorates the mind, and all that injures the mind sooner or later tells upon the physical character.

THE BREAST-PLATE REVIVED.—A letter from Italy to an English paper says that breast plates are being revived as in the glorious times of the Knights of the Round Table and the Plantagenets. M. Muratori, the director of the Genoa Penitentiary, has succeeded in devising a breast plate for soldiers, which scarcely weighs three English pounds. After repeated experiments, practiced on it with heavy cavalry pistols at five paces and lances, bayonets and swords, it has been discovered to be utterly impenetrable both to bullets and thrusts. The most striking peculiarity of this breast-plate, which can in no way impede the movements of a soldier, is that not the slightest atom of metallic matter enters into its composition. The Minister for War and several superior officers, being present during the experiments, were highly satisfied with its practical usefulness.

The Johnson Convention held at Leavenworth, Kansas, on Thursday elected seven delegates to the National Union Convention. The Kansas Democrats will also send a delegation.

If I Had Thought Thou Could'st Have Died.

The following piece is by the Rev. Charles Wolfe, author of "The Burial of Sir John Moore," that short lyric that has made the poet's name immortal:

If I had thought thou could'st have died,
I might not weep for thee;
But I forgot, when by thy side,
That thou could'st mortal be;
It never through my mind had passed
The time would e'er be o'er,
And I on thee should look my last,
And thou should'st smile no more.

And still upon that face I look,
And think 'twill smile again;
And still the thought I will not brook
That I must look in vain.
But when I speak—thou dost not say
What thou ne'er left'st unsaid;
And now I feel, as well I may,
Sweet Mary, thou art dead!

If thou would'st stay, e'en as thou art,
All cold and all serene—
I still might press thy silent heart,
And where thy smiles have been!
While e'en thy chill, bleak corse I have,
Thou seemest still mine own;
But there I lay thee in thy grave—
And I am now alone!

I do not think, where'er thou art,
Thou hast forgotten me;
And I, perhaps may soothe this heart,
In thinking too of thee;
Yet there was round thee such a dawn
Of light ne'er seen before,
As fancy never could have drawn,
And never can restore!

Report of the Late Riot.

BY LIEUT GOV VOORHIES, ATTORNEY GENERAL HERRON AND MAYOR MONROE.

NEW ORLEANS, August 3, 1866.

His Excellency President Andrew Johnson.

SIR—Your Excellency is already in possession of the main facts as regards the conspiracy, which by reviving the Convention of 1864, purposed to subvert the civil government of Louisiana.

An informal meeting of twenty-nine members—one hundred and fifty being the whole number, and seventy six a quorum—proceeded to depose the President of the Convention, who considered the Convention itself extinct and himself [illegible], and to elect R. K. Howell as President pro tem. They adjourned to meet again, and a proclamation was issued by the President pro tem. convoking the Convention to meet on the 30th July last, and requesting his Excellency the Governor of the State to issue writs of election to fill vacancies.

So far, the whole matter was looked upon as a harmless experiment, although most seriously intended, the people being confident that the Governor would not countenance or favor this proclamation, and that, in case the Convention would commit any act of interference, he would at once have it dispersed.

Unfortunately, however, after the lapse of nearly a month, the Governor issued writs of election to fill up fifty one vacancies, or thereby. This document, to which the Secretary of State refused to give his attestation under the seal of State, was issued under the attestation of the Private Secretary of the Governor.

The people of the State became alarmed when no doubt could be entertained as to the fact that their Chief Magistrate had given willing aid and assistance to subvert the government, the preservation of which was especially entrusted to his keeping. On Friday, the 27th of July, a large meeting was held in the Hall of the House of Representatives, professedly for the advocacy of universal suffrage, but in reality to organize for the meeting of the Convention on the Monday following. The object of the meeting was to arouse the passions and prejudices of the colored population, so as to make them the instrument of attack by urging them headlong into a conflict with the State and municipal authorities. On the other hand, we were determined to prevent riot and bloodshed by pursuing such a course as would baffle the nefarious calculations of those agitators. Our remedy—and the only remedy—was to have recourse to the usual process of law, and even then to proceed in such a way as to deprive them of the responsibility of all collision whatever.

The case was submitted to the Grand Jury by the Attorney General, and, in the meantime, the Lieutenant Governor and the Mayor called upon Gen. Baird to ascertain whether, if a warrant issued upon a legal indictment were placed in the hands of the Sheriff for the arrest of the members of the Convention, the military would interfere. The answer was that the Sheriff himself would be arrested, and that the Convention meeting peaceably, could not be interfered with by the officers of the law.

It is proper here to state that the Mayor had previously addressed a note to Gen. Baird, informing him that he would be interfered with by the municipal force, and would be proceeded to [illegible] the Convention. [illegible] The answer to this communication was that the meeting of the Convention [illegible] would not be suppressed by the Mayor, and that he [illegible] the military authorities would prevent [illegible].

It was suggested by the Lieutenant Governor that the city authorities, under these circumstances, should not be interfere to prevent the meeting of the Convention, and proposed that a warrant of arrest, which were placed in the hands of the Sheriff for the members, before attempting to execute it, would be sent to the General, who thereupon, would inform his Excellency the President. This arrangement was satisfactory to both parties. On the same day the Attorney General and the Lieutenant Governor telegraphed to the President to ascertain whether the proceedings of the Convention could be interfered with, and whether the members of the Convention could be arrested by the military. The answer was received.

On Sunday, the 29th, the State and municipal authorities called upon the press to advise the people as to the proper conduct to be held the next day, so as to avoid all collision and riot, and the Mayor issued his proclamation to the same effect. The press of the city, with the exception of the Radical organ, gave wise and salutary counsels to the public, advising all good citizens to avoid congregating around the Capitol, and to demean themselves with prudence and discretion.

On the morning of the 30th the Lieutenant Governor called upon Gen. Baird to communicate to him the President's dispatch, and also inquired from the General if he would not have some troops in the vicinity of the Hall to preserve peace and good order. Gen. Baird answered that the suggestion was a good one, and that troops would be sent to meet the Convention. The suggestion was then made that it would be proper to have a posse of the police placed on the spot might be construed as meant to overawe the members, and that the civil authorities did not intend to interfere with the Convention until instructions were received from the President, as above stated. It was proper to have troops to cooperate with a small police force to preserve peace and to prevent any attempt to bring about a collision. This suggestion met the approval of the General, who then stated that he would give immediate orders to have the troops in readiness.

Before the end of that interview it was again agreed upon between General Baird and the Lieutenant Governor that whatever warrant of arrest might be placed in the hands of the Sheriff would be submitted to him, but in any attempt to have it executed; and that upon the information of the General the objects of the matter would be referred to the President.

The Mayor being informed of this arrangement, sent but a small police force to the vicinity of the Hall, and the troops that were to act in connection with the police were eagerly expected.

At such information having reached the Lieutenant Governor that in the Third District there was a commencement of effervescence, and that large numbers of negroes were coming towards Canal street, from above and below, he immediately sent a dispatch to the General, conveying the intelligence, and urging him to have the troops be sent without delay. About one hour afterwards the riot broke out, ending in the dispersion of the Convention, and the capture of the rioters, including several members of this body.

It is not our purpose to argue the question at issue as to the actual commencement of the collision, and to lay precisely the mode and manner in which it originated. We will, however, remark that the conflict was in every instance brought about by the armed mob sustaining the Convention. Suffice it to say that the city authorities took all the precautions possible to prevent the outbreak; that they applied during three days previous to have the aid of the military to preserve order at the place where was to meet the Convention, that the authorities, State and Municipal, had come to an understanding to act in concert with the military for the police, and the citizens, no more than the police, contemplated to prevent the Convention to hold their meeting peaceably, and adjourn and disperse unmolested, and that the warrant for their arrest would have been submitted to the military, as agreed upon, although the President's dispatch to the Lieutenant Governor, and the subsequent one to the Attorney General, were imperative that the military must sustain and not thwart the Courts.

The military authorities have been for the three days previous to the riot in constant communication with the Attorney General, the Lieutenant Governor and the Mayor, with the view of preventing the impending riot. The efforts were unsuccessful, and could not counteract the effects of the incendiary counsels and appeals of those who, for sinister purposes, had in view this very result in order to reach a political harvest. That the civil authorities have done their duty in this respect, is patent; that more could have been done by them was impossible, as they were not allowed to remove the cause of the riot by taking the proper means to prevent the meeting of the Convention; and we doubt not for a moment that the military commander himself will be the first to corroborate these facts, and to arrest all calumnious imputation against the conduct of our people under these trying circumstances.

As regards the proclamation of martial law, the least that can be said is that it was inopportune, for the rioting had ceased completely, the police being master of the situation. The colored population, as a body, did not participate in these disgraceful scenes, and freedmen in the vicinity of the riot were standing as lookers on, without being molested. The colored mob, in unison with a few white rioters, who were leading them in the affair, were no doubt well organized. That they were well armed is undoubted, since forty two policemen and several citizens were either killed or wounded by them, although the conflict was over in less than two hours. Twenty seven rioters were killed and a considerable number wounded. At dark, when all was over, when those of the mob were either dispersed or in prison, and tranquility and order were restored, martial law was proclaimed, and the prisons where the rioters were confined, emptied by orders from headquarters. These measures undoubtedly were not intended for reviving the hopes of the outlaws, but were they not calculated to inspire them with false hopes? The very next morning the organ of the agitators was issued, containing, as usual, the most inflammatory articles, and so the succeeding issues.

Had the military on Monday afternoon taken a stand to cooperate with the civil authorities instead of proclaiming martial law, the most beneficial effects would have been the result.
