THE ERE.

PRINTED DAILY, BY P. DELAND.
St. Peter-Street, between Bourbon & Royal.

MONDAY, NOV. 17, 1828.

NEW-YORK, OCTOBER 24.

By the packet ship Sully from Havre, we have copious files of Paris papers to the 15th ult. inclusive.—On the great question of the Russian war, they afford nothing decisive; though it seems pretty evident, that the resistance offered by the Turks, exceeds the expectations of their invaders. Sorties in great force, and with great success, were from time to time made by the garrisons of the besieged towns of Widdin, Nistria, &c.; and an advanced corps of Russians that had passed beyond Shumla, were immediately driven back—even according to the Odessa accounts. The Emperor was still at Odessa, and would not rejoin the army till about the middle of September. Meanwhile it would appear, that the plenipotentiaries of other powers were seeking to bring about a cessation of hostilities. A rumour had however obtained, that Nicholas had rejected the intervention of Lord Hertesbury. The French expedition had arrived in the Morea, and were to debark at Calamata.

Sir E. Codrington had returned from Egypt with the transports to re-convey to that country, the troops of Ibrahim Pacha, who were to evacuate the Morea; and the French, it is said, would land without opposition from any quarter and garrison the fortresses of Greece. The accounts from London are to the 12th. The London New Times represents the administration of the Duke of Wellington, with pusillanimity in respect of the affairs of Turkey, and the French journals speak openly and boldly of the invasion by the Russians, as dictated solely by ambition. In both capitols, London and Paris, rumours of misunderstanding and want of concert between England and Russia and England and France, in relation to the affairs of the East, and were circulating. In answer to these, the Courier of the 10th of Sept. says, "from the date of the protocol respecting the affairs of Greece, and even earlier than that, there has not been the slightest misunderstanding between the cabinets of France or England, whether directed by M. de Villele, or M. de la Ferronaye; by Mr. Canning, Lord Goderich, or Lord Wellington. On the contrary, the greatest cordiality has existed; and in saying so, we beg our readers to believe that we do not speak lightly—the best understanding, and the most active concert in all measures respecting the policy of the two countries, and that to be observed towards other nations.

BOSTON, October 22.

On the 8th inst. lat. 25 4, long. 57, boarded the wreck of a brig of about 150 tons, fore-mast and bowsprit standing—hatches off—full of water—had been under jury-masts. An awning was over the cap of the fore-mast, and a Dutch Bible in the foreto—no person on board; could not fully ascertain her name, but appeared like Queen, or Owen, and apparently an American vessel.

Basseterre, (Guadeloupe) Sept. 12.

It was with feelings of no ordinary exultation that we witnessed the arrival in this port, on Monday last, of his Majesty's ship Victor, capt. Lloyd, with her prize, Las Damas Argentinas, the same vessel which had piratically captured the Caraboo, the particulars of which, as far as they had transpired at our last publication, had so justly excited the universal indignation of this community.

We stated in our last that the Victor had proceeded to leeward, with Lieut. Col. Harper, for the attainment of information relating to the Caraboo; the material points of which, we understand, is confirmation of the fact, that two resident inhabitants of St. Eustatius had accompanied the brig from that island to Saba, and that the pirate crew had there left her, after confiding her to the care of the parties who went in her from St. Eustatius to Saba.

On Thursday the Victor sailed from Saba, and arrived St. Eustatius early Saturday morning, when communications were had by capt. Lloyd and lieut. col. Harper with the Executive. After an hour's stay in the harbor of St. Eustatius, the Victor departed on her return to this island, and when near to the land, a schooner, answering the description that had been obtained of the one which had captured the Caraboo, was discovered to be standing for St. Eustatius, with a full complement of men; upon which Capt. Lloyd immediately went in chase. The schooner first displayed Colombian colors, and after being fired at by the Victor, she hoisted the Dutch flag, and had recourse to sweeps to further her escape. At this time the Victor had her under the range of her guns; but Capt. Lloyd, in respect to the flag she then bore, permitted her to enter the port of St. Eustatius, when she hoisted Buenos Ayrean colors, and a signal (a black S on white ground,) corresponding with the one displayed at the mast head of the Caraboo, on the 13th ultimo, when she lay off the harbor of St. Eustatius.

Capt. Lloyd, having followed her into port, dispatched his first Lieutenant, who was attended by Lieut. Col. Harper, to the Commandant, with a peremptory demand of her as his prize. Hesitation on the part of the Commandant, induced Capt. Lloyd instantly to go on shore, and repeat the demand by an official letter. The Court of Civil Justice was then convened, and their Honors; actuated no doubt by a fair and impartial consideration of the case, judged it expedient to deliver up the vessel with the captain and crew, 40 in number, to their active and vigilant pursuer.

The Victor and her prize arrived here Tuesday noon, and an alarm being fired, the Windward Battalion of militia turned out, and lined the beach for the purpose of receiving and securing the lawless banditti; 28 of whom were landed, and escorted to the jail, where they were confined. The others were landed on Wednesday, and the whole are in charge of a strong militia guard, which have been doing duty since Tuesday evening.

The schooner mounts one long 18 pounder on a pivot, and a stand of arms for 60 men, with a quantity of ammunition. The captain's name Jose Brysan; who had confessed to the capture of the Carraboo, several articles belonging to which vessel were found on board the prize. He represents that the captain and crew of the Carraboo, and of a French brig which they captured on her voyage from Malaga to St. Maloes, and which arrived at St. Eustatius and was there plundered and scuttled when Lieut. col. Harper was at that island, on his first mission, were put into a boat, without sails, about 5 miles from Lancelot, one of the Canary Islands, off which it was blowing fresh at the time. The number of these unfortunate persons, whose fate is now doubtful, was 17 or 18.

Examinations of the Captain and Surgeon were commenced on Wednesday, and resumed yesterday and to-day: of which it may not be proper to promulgate any part until they have been disposed of by trial, the particulars of which we shall then feel it our duty to report.

More from St. Thomas.—The editors of the Chronicle are indebted to a commercial friend in this city, for the following extract of a letter, dated

"ST. THOMAS, 30th Sept. 1828.

"We have escaped the hurricane months without any damage, and it is that the crops will be very abundant.

"It may be interesting to some of your countrymen, when they hear of the capture of the piratical schooner Bolivar, alias Elizabeth, alias Las Damas Argentinas, with a Buenos Ayrean letter of marque, Capt. Jose Buysan. She was seized, after having been followed into St. Eustatius, by a British-man-of-war, into which place she had sent an English brig [the Caraboo] from Liverpool, as her prize. Capt. Jose and his crew were made prisoners, and carried to St. Kitts. The circumstances of the trial have not fully arrived here yet, but it is known that the captain and some twenty or thirty of his crew had the privilege of "dancing on the tight rope." The doctor with a few others, were permitted to turn king's evidence. The most aggravating circumstances in this case, appear in the cruel treatment towards the crew and passengers of the English brig—among the latter were some respectable ladies, who, after having been made to satiate the brutal passions of their captors, (one of them died in consequence) were, with the crew, bundled into a leaky boat, upon a stormy element, and being out of sight of land, it is more than probable that all these unfortunate creatures miserably perished.

"The brig Doris, Williams, and the Orion, from your place, are here."

[From the Baltimore Com. Chron.

A Mother of Princes.—The beautiful Maria Theresa, who was married in 1736, to Francis I. Emperor, of Germany, had fifteen or sixteen children, ten of whom were elevated to sovereign power.—These were, Joseph II.; Leopold, grand duke of Tuscany, and afterwards Emperor; Maximilian, grand master of the Teutonic Order, and elector of Cologe; Ferdinand, archduke of Milan; Caroline, queen of Sicily; Marie Antoinette, queen of France; Maria Amelia, archduchess of Parma; Christina, archduchess of the Low Countries; Mariana, arch-abbess of Prague and Clagenfurth; and Elizabeth, duchess of Inspruck. Maria Theresa was the last of the noble race of the Counts of Hapsburgh.

An old lady who had numbered her 90th year, was asked by a sprightly miss in her teens, at what period of life ladies lost all relish for gallantry?—To which the ancient matron, with a significant look, replied, "indeed my child, you must put the question to some one older than I am."
