NO 31.

[illegible] QUESTION.

[illegible] Editor of the Bee:

The Department are desirous of the State to meet the heavy [illegible] the present year. [illegible] the pro-

[illegible] 1,000,000 for transportation. This is certainly a small sum, but let us, however, admit it as being correct. The [illegible] of gift can be considered as one of the resources of the State, particularly for the payment of a foreign debt.

Of the amount received for drayage, I have already shown it serves to pay not only for sends, drays and hands, but also other expenses and charges, including those throughout the year, as well as for a large portion of the labor of the city, which, we are strangers and citizens, have to share with them the accumulated profits of their industrious seasons.

From the amount received for storage, we have to deduct [illegible] expenses for materials and labor in erecting the sheds, which as already shown we pay to strangers, to my knowledge of the entire rent of stores, held and owned by them, and also the [illegible] labor [illegible] deductions to be made for clerk hire, lights, [illegible] stationery, and other various expenses [illegible] the Levee, and, when these deductions are made, [illegible] from the high estimate of "Open Levee" [illegible] to be left as available towards meeting the [illegible] of the Department.

The sum will [illegible] that 7,000,000 dollars are spent here by [illegible] citizens who visit our city during six months of the year, if possible, though I greatly doubt it, that 40,000 strangers may visit our city during the season, but really [illegible] taxes on credulity a little too strongly to ask us to believe it. Of these, [illegible] the [illegible] that time, for it is on that basis the calculation of [illegible] is founded. I do not believe that at any odd time, [illegible] are 10,000 non-resident strangers in this city; I do believe that would be a very large estimate, for the [illegible] number as being here during all the season. Take, however, [illegible] by our calculation, which gives us 40,000 strangers, and we have the amount spent by them, every dollar of it, is a dead loss and drain upon us, whenever they [illegible] we derive from the labor, in the profits on the [illegible] of their expenditure. As already shown, every dollar [illegible] goes from us out to drain the capital of building and furnishing hotels and houses to lodge them, and a large portion of the wages we pay for service, which goes to the benefit of foreigners and taken consequently as gains. We receive with one hand from their strangers, and pay back by the whole of it away with the other, to other strangers. Take the amount thus that really remains in our city, and with our citizens arising from the expenditure of strangers, and see how contemptibly insignificant it is.

I am willing, however, that every one should make his own estimate from the data I have given, as to the resources of the state from strangers, and to the amount of any other resources that may enter and accrue to this, and to make his own estimates for all of them, and then let us see how they will compare with other resources of other states. I am in the first place, take the Massachusetts, one of the smaller though not a small state.

Her legislature, some few years since, directed a statistical account of the resources of her manufactures. In doing this, whatever errors occurred from excess of confusion, nothing was included that did not actually exist, and for which actual returns were made. Her manufactures, of great many manufacturies, and other establishments were, no doubt, limited, [illegible] others, the entire and immense [illegible] of her population, and of her having an immense and enormous drain of billions upon us for the rest of our data, foreign supplies of even the necessaries of life, and enormous expenditures of money, which, if she is entirely exempt, or has to bear them in a very limited extent, indeed. Her population, to be sure, is much greater than yours, but in most, if not in all, other points, detailed, her resources equal or exceed ours, even in the proportion of our respective populations.

Virginia, your mother state, is and ever with planting states generally, as regards the estimate of our wealth and means, is, that our crop appears before us in large masses—our cotton and sugar figures largely in estimates, and counts by millions, and from these, we pass down, and have to gather to carry it to foreign markets—all which circumstances are apt to give exaggerated ideas of her wealth and resources. Her population, however, is nearly equal of ours, of country, as yours, of the Mississippi bottom, and her resources, if not equal, are very large, and, if made up, would make and small counting, counts—or, to speak plainly, in cents and farthings, we pass down, and have to gather to carry it to foreign markets—all which circumstances are apt to give exaggerated ideas of her wealth and resources. Her population, to be sure, is much greater than yours, but in most, if not in all, other points, detailed, her resources equal or exceed ours, even in the proportion of our respective populations.
