THE DAILY BEE.
VENTES A L'ENCAN.
EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.
C. F. WEISER, } A. SOBRY,
F. DUVERGER, } P. DUPUY.
DAILY PAPER, (one year in advance) $14.00
WEEKLY PAPER, semi weekly, (one year in advance) 5.00
Agents and subscribers must give one week's notice of stopping before they can be allowed to discontinue.

The Daily Bee.

OFFICE, 83 CHARTRES ST. NEW ORLEANS, TUESDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 5, 1865. VOL. XVI—NEW SERIES. VOL. XIII—WHOLE NO. 3011.

THE DAILY BEE.

TUESDAY MORNING, DEC. 4, 1865.

Subscriptions by the Week.

Carriers of the Bee are authorized to receive subscriptions for the week, at the following rates:

The Northern Mail came through yesterday, with the latest dates.

THE END OF THE WAR PANIC.

Enough has transpired to show that the people of the South, having recovered from their panic, and ascertained that there did not exist the slightest reason for the predicted approaching collision with the North, have grown heartily ashamed of themselves. The mails by the Cahawba, more particulars of this recantation in the Times, it will be remembered, first to sound the alarm; said outcry of its position and influence, and consternation among all classes, accomplished its purpose, and it was in the season to take back what had said. It does not do this in words, and is summarily as upon this point. Thus, when the Times distributes famous Tartar despatch announcing the capture of Sebastopol was a mistake, informed its readers, that the mistake was an error in time; and that, and that the battle of which had just been fought, opened and Sebastopol, and secured the possession of that city. And the people, more gullible even than our ancestors in national glory and vanity are ready to accept the compliment, and suffer themselves to be imposed upon by the Printing House Square is coming from its latest deception, and seems to prove that the difficulty of a civil war in the imagination of its readers, on this side of the water. Whether the President and his party, have engaged in electioneering manœuvres, intended to win popularity, and political capital by getting up a demonstration against England, upon pretext of interference with the affairs of this country. This is either a false supposition. We incline to the belief that Lincoln knows better, but presumes the majority of the country, and relies upon them an invention so absurd as that every school boy in the United States would treat it with derision. Indeed, if the Times is at a loss to know what to do, it cannot contrive a more ridiculous exposition of its war articles.—Perhaps, however, the President is a party to the deception, and especially as it is a matter of public notoriety that the Times enjoys the confidence of the President, and his party, and is regarded as their organ. Perhaps, however, the President is not so much a party to the deception, as the Times, in its desperate extremity, has resorted to the expedient of getting up a demonstration against England, without interference with the affairs of this country. This is either a false supposition. We incline to the belief Lincoln knows better, but presumes the majority of the country of its readers, upon them an invention so absurd as that every school boy in the United States would treat it with derision. Indeed, if the Times is at a loss to know what to do, it cannot contrive a more ridiculous exposition of its war articles.—Perhaps, however, the President is a party to the deception, as the Times, in its desperate extremity, has resorted to the expedient of getting up a demonstration against England, without interference with the affairs of this country. This is either a false supposition. We incline to the belief Lincoln knows better, but presumes the majority