

FileNet® Business Process Manager is now IBM® Case Foundation:
See What's New—and What it Means for You

What's in a name? In this case, a name can mean increased flexibility—and lower costs. FileNet Business Process Manager is now called IBM Case Foundation, but it's more than just a change in terminology—it's a shift that illustrates IBM's continued focus on delivering enterprise-class, content centric, case-style solutions. So while the name may be different, the industry-leading technology—and the commitment to our customers hasn't changed at all.

What's new in the latest release of IBM Case Foundation? Take a look at how this solution can dramatically reduce your total cost of ownership, while making administration simpler than ever before:

- Streamlined installation and deployment thanks to the combination of the Process Engine and Content Engine into a single JEE application called the Content Platform Engine.
- Improved services for multiple databases and component management through the Content Platform Engine.
- Expanded IBM Case Monitor and IBM Case Analyzer capabilities for greater flexibility and reduced costs.
- Simplified administration tools for easier installation, configuration and deployment.

So discover the benefits of IBM Case Foundation and learn more about IBM's enterprise-class advanced case management solutions. And be sure to get important details about this change—and what it means for you.