PARIS. OCTOBR 15 .- Private Correspondence. On my way to the Chamber this mornng, I called at the American Embassy in the neighboring street, when I was shown a letter which had just been received by way of Havre from a Gentleman residing in General Jackson' family-in fact, from the President's private socretury, side-de-camp, and friend. Its import was to say the elections in progress for the approaching Session of Congress, so far as known at the date of the communication, were in a sense so decidedly friendly to the principles and policy of the present government of the United States that no doubt was entertained by the President himself, or by any of his triends, as to his election for a second time to the chief magistraey of the American Republic. It is not doubt ed by Mr. Rives that the treaty negociated by him for giving the indemnity due by France of America, arising from the spoliations con mitted upder the Berlin and Milan decrees, and for regulating the commercial intercouse between the two countries, will be promptly ratified by Congress; from whence, and from the expected re-election of General Jackson, it is inferred that the foreign policy of the United States will henceforth be conducted on more tileral principles than heretafore.
