THE WAR AND ITS RESULTS.

We like the tone of the Emperor Napoleon's declaration of war against Austria. Unless his professions are the mere disguise of a hollow and pretentious hypocrisy, they are fraught with the most tangible and substantial encouragement to Italy. We like, too, the positive and direct manner in which he manifests his intentions. He is not afraid or ashamed to tell assembled Europe that he sympathizes with Italy in her resistance to the brutal and bloody sway of the Austrian tyrant, and that the object of the war is to restore Italy to herself, not to impose upon her a change of masters. The plainness of this declaration smacks of sincerity, and justifies the confident hope that Louis Napoleon will keep his word. Should he prove true to his promise, a glorious future awaits him. Instead of driving the hated Austrians back to the Adriatic, and liberating Italy from the despotism of Austria, and authorizing the disenthralled populations of the peninsula to unite under one government, selecting their own sovereign, and limiting his power by constitutional restraints, the French Emperor will best subserve his own glory, and strengthen his influence throughout Europe by rigidly abstaining from all attempts at acquiring an undue control over the country which he has redeemed from misrule. We are disposed to believe that such, indeed, will be his policy, and that he is not animated by the lust of territorial acquisition, or by the insane ambition of pursuing the career of a conqueror.

It is pertinently remarked by a cotemporary that every thing in the personal antecedents, in the published convictions, in the manifest, individual and dynastic interests of Napoleon III. conspires to justify the belief that in accepting the war thrust upon him by Austria, the ruler of France is bent upon precisely the objects which he avows in his manifesto of the second of May. Napoleon III., says the New York Times, "Openly disclaims now, as he openly disclaimed before going to war with Russia in 1854, any intention or wish of making territorial conquests for France. England, which joined him in the disavowal in 1854, did her best in 1855 to induce him to violate it, and sought to prolong the Crimean war, in the hope of eventually securing some solid result of annexation as its reward. Her leading journals are now at no pains to conceal how, and by whom, the Crimea, when conquered, should be held. But Napoleon III. was faithful to his pledges and to his policy. He fought to secure the recognition by Russia of Turkey as an independent power, entitled to the rights of other European States. This object secured, he made peace, and England, however unwillingly, was obliged to follow his example.

"He has a sound claim, therefore, on the confidence of the world, when he now asserts that he demands and will absolutely to act upon the alternative presented by Austria. To this extremity, he says, 'the Austria brought matters. Italy, between the mail rule up to the Alps, or Italy must be free to the shores of the Adriatic. The case could not be more decisively or more distinctly stated. The hesitation of Austria upon her advance against Sardinia, after the fierce onslaught of her first movements, would seem to show that she now for the first time begins to appreciate this simple reality of her situation."

With respect to the result of this war, while of course no man would be fool-hardy enough to predict its ultimate termination, or the number of powers now neutral which may be eventually involved in it, there is no difficulty whatever in arriving at the conclusion that Austria will be essentially and unequivocally thrashed. In the first place her cause is an unjust one, and however brave her soldiers, they would fight with more endurance and ardor if they were on the right side. Secondly, the Austrians are not the equals of the French in daring prowess, in absolute perfection of discipline, or in bold and rapid military evolutions. Thirdly, Frenchmen are a more martial race than Hapsburg's army adores France, combats for glory, and loves martial feats as sincerely as an Irishman loves a shindy at Donnybrook fair. The rapture of the strife is a feeling which a Frenchman can thoroughly appreciate, whereas the Austrians, with their countless tribes, Magyar, Croat, Wallack, Servian and German, all mingled together, differing in dialect, in customs, in opinions, and in attachment to the sovereign whom they serve, are stimulated by no nobler inducement than the liberal application of the stick in their military training. Such men may make prime food for gunpowder, solid machines that will stand much battering before they give way, but they will never rush to battle with the enthusiastic fervor and absolute delight which with the French are at once the anticipation and the proximate cause of victory. Finally, the Austrian has to conduct the campaign on a soil swarming with those who utterly loathe and abhor him, and who, when required to fight him, deem their marches and counter-marches, their perils and sufferings, a labor of love. Man to man, and gun for gun, we have no earthly doubt of the discomfiture of the Austrians. Louis Napoleon will be extremely likely to chase them to the shores of the Adriatic, and they will be fortunate if they are still suffered to interbranch themselves within their ancient limits.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWS.—We are indebted to A. E. Kennedy, No. 7 Exchange Place, for the first number of this cheap and interesting periodical. The number before us is particularly well filled and finely illustrated.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.—Messrs. Ezekiel have sent us the last number of this capital newspaper. It contains another chapter of Dickens's new story, and two more of "Trumps."

SALE CONTINUED.—The sale by the Sheriff of the stock of goods in store No. 42 Bienville street will be continued to-day, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Thanks to the officers of the steamer John C. Swon for very late St. Louis, Cincinnati and Memphis papers.

THE POPE COMING.—The Philadelphia Bulletin says: "Advices from Washington inform us that letters have been received there from high sources announcing the prevalence of rumors in Italy that the Pope may be obliged to fly for refuge to this country. Our Ministers at Rome and Naples are said to speak of this contingency as highly probable."

THE STUDY OF LANGUAGE.—The study of language has ever been considered a study of high importance, regarded merely as a means of intellectual cultivation.

There are obvious reasons for this. The analysis of language is the analysis of thought. Resolving compex forms of speech into simple ones, and again combining simple expressions into the most complex, dissecting and investigating, alternately by logic and aesthetics, the varying properties of words and phrases, are operations which come nearer, perhaps, than any other in which we are engaged to urge subjecting spirit itself to the crucible of experiment. The study of grammar, the comparison of language, the translation of thought from one language to another, are so many abstractions logic and the laws of mind. The subtleties of language arise from the very nature of the human and mysterious essence, the human mind, of which speech is the prime agent as a medium of communication.

The class of studies under consideration bears nearly the same relation to the spiritual that anatomy does to the bodily part of us. It is by the dissecting knife of a keen and well tempered logic, applied to the examination of the various forms which human thought assumes, that we most truly learn the very essence and property of thought itself; it is the intricate, immediate, indissoluble connection and correlation between mind and language, between human thought and human speech, that the soul itself and the mould into which it is cast, that gives such importance to the general class of studies known as philological.

The study of language, more than any other study, tends to make the mind acute, discriminating, and correct. It tends also, in a most especial manner, to fit a person to train the minds of others to acuteness, discrimination, and exactness. The person who has learned to express a thought with entire exactness and idiomatic propriety in two languages; or where, from the want of analogy between the two languages, he finds this impracticable, to perceive the exact shade of difference between the two expressions of which can trace historically and logically the precise meaning of a word from its original starting point in reason and fact, and mark intelligently its gradual departure and their intelligently its gradual departure and their consequences; who can perceive the exact difference between words and phrases nearly synonymous, and who can express that difference in terms clear and intelligible to others, that person has already attained both a high degree of intellectual acumen himself and an important means of producing such acumen in others.

The study of language is, in the profession of teaching, like the sharpening of the tools of the mechanic. Words are the teacher's tools. Human knowledge, even before it is expressed, and as it is laid up in the chambers of the mind, exists in words. We think in words. We teach in words. We are qualified to teach only so far as we have learned the use and power of words.—Sunday News & Times.

EUROPE.

THE ARAGO'S MAILS.

The mails by the steamer Arago furnish some interesting details.

The State of Affairs in Sardinia.

Reception of the French Troops—Equality of Opposing Forces—Generalship to Decide the Day.

GENOA, April 30.—Yesterday was a day of profound calm in Turin, which has looked like a deserted village during the two days that have elapsed since the last troops left it; and I actually heard one or two credulous persons whisper something about the probability of peace. Idle dreams, upset by the evening's realities! News came of the Austrians having crossed the Ticino at Gravellona and other points, and Casale was said to be threatened. From information which subsequently reached me, however, it appeared that only small bodies of troops had entered Piedmont, for the purpose, probably, of repairing the bridge which had been intersected at short intervals by deep trenches, and encumbered by the trees that grew at the sides of the road, which had been felled and dropped across them. There was no reason for believing that Casale was menaced more than any other point, except that Gravellona, which is about three miles from the Ticino, and to which the largest detachment seems to have crossed, is the nearest point of the frontier to that fortress.

If the accounts which have reached me from persons who were lately at Casale be correct, that place is in no condition to resist a serious attack. It was expected that the Austrians would cross in force early this morning. I am writing at an early hour, and can as yet add nothing to the heads of information sent to you last night by telegraph, and which I hope have by this time reached you, although I dare not feel too confident of it, owing to the vast mass of messages which, at 11 P. M., were waiting transmission. I mentioned the arrival of French troops. Not to overtaxe numbers, I will estimate at 70,000 those which are this morning in the Sardinian States, divided between Genoa, (possibly some of these may have gone to Alessandria) Susa and Turin, for they have begun to arrive here. I have just returned from witnessing the entrance of the first instalment, the 19th battalion of the Chasseurs de Vincennes. The National Guards were under arms at six this morning to receive them. I was just in time before they arrived, and at a little before nine they marched down the Via Santa Teresa, which leads direct from the railway terminus into the heart of the city. The reception they met was enthusiastic The windows were thronged, chiefly by women, and flowers were showered on them. Most of the French had a small bouquet or a flower stuck in the muzzle of their rifles. Every where all sides a population thronged to see them pass. They were greeted as they moved onwards by a running fire of cheers and clapping of hands. Passing down the Via Nuova, they soon found those sides of the Piazz di Castello in front of the King's Palace and of the Minister, and up the Via di Po, the allotted quarters. It is said that several more trains full will arrive to-day. Marshal Canrobert and General Niel arrived yesterday, and took up their quarters in the Royal Palace. Marshal Baraguay d'Hilliers has landed at Genoa. The troops disembarked at the last named place have met the most cordial reception from the people.

The French seem to be transporting most of those troops that come from Marseilles and Toulon on board of men-of-war. Among others, according to the Genoa papers, the Bretagne and the Napoleon entered that port the day before yesterday. At the same time I see it mentioned in another paper that our Admiralty is advertising for transport for two regiments to the Mediterranean. There are probably good reasons for this, but to those ignorant of the fact it would look as if the French made their men-of war more generally useful than we do.

Since I commenced this letter other French troops have arrived, and one sees soldiers and officers about the streets, the former fraternizing with the National Guards find with a few stray Piedmontese soldiers still here. As far as my observation goes, the French have every reason to be well pleased with their reception in Turin. At 3 this afternoon a battalion of the 43d infantry marched down to the Genoa station amid the cheers of the crowds, and under the fine language our position upon the right of search question.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT.

THE MISSING OVERLAND MAILS.

ST. LOUIS, May 23.—The missing overland mails, which left Stockton in the Mohave Indian Reserve, were driven back by the Mohave Indians, and not allowed to cross the Colorado river.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

American Eagle Routed from Sonora.

ST. LOUIS, May 23.—The overland California mail has arrived here, bringing dates from San Francisco to the 29th ultimo, which have been anticipated by the Coatzacoalcos at New Orleans.

The mail, however, brings later advices from Sonora, which represent the country in a deplorable state of anarchy and misrule.

Great excitement prevailed in Sonora, owing to a report that Gen. Walker was in the field with another Sonoran expedition at San Francisco, and the Mexican authorities and people were greatly exasperated against the American residents of the country.

The American residents of Hermosillo had been ordered to leave the city within twenty-four hours, or suffer the penalty of death.

Americans could not appear in the street without being insulted, and in some cases injured by the mob.

FATAL SHOOTING AFFAIR.

MOBILE, May 23.—A difficulty occurred this evening between B. B. Odom and H. G. McClintock, of this city, in which pistols were used.

McClintock was shot by Odom, and it is believed that the wound will prove mortal.

Lard closed quiet at 11 to 11½c.

The net deposits during the week amount to $140,000.

All the upper streams are also receding.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES.

ST. LOUIS, May 23.—The steamer L. M. Kennett and the A. T. Lacy have arrived here from New Orleans.

The steamer Belle City left here for New Orleans last evening.

HARD TIMES IN IOWA.—We are sorry to learn from the Iowa papers that there is much suffering in that State from want of food. During the early part of spring cattle died of starvation by scores throughout the State, there being no grain to feed with; and that affairs are not a whit improved at this time may be learned by the following picture of distress from the Eddyville Commercial:

It is useless to deny or attempt to conceal the fact. This region of the country is destitute of the necessaries of life. The stock of food for man and beast are about exhausted. There is not enough to feed those who are unable to buy flour; but they have not the means to buy corn. It is in the hands of a few persons, and they will only sell for the cash, at a dollar a bushel. Not one-third of those who need to buy corn have the dollar, or any means of getting it; for the money, like the corn, is out of the reach of the destitute.

We are no panic-maker, but of this we feel sure, and we speak advisedly, that in thirty days from this time, unless those who have a surplus agree to part with it on time or for produce, there will be starvation and armed away by bands of desperate men to feed their starving families. This sounds terribly; but it is true, and we know it, and we implore you to send your families to starve when food can be procured by going and taking it.

SHOCKING CUSTOM.—A recent communication to the Indian Office, from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at San Francisco, reports a strange but shocking custom that prevails among almost all the Indians of California. That is that of burying alive. When a widow dies and leaves young children, the nearest of kin to the deceased buy the orphans alive. The Superintendent states that he will use his efforts to put an end to this cruel practice, but it has not been possible to prevent it entirely as yet, even on the Government reservations.—Pittsburg Gazette.

AN UNEXPECTED FINISH.—Speaking of the tendency of temperance orators to set forward themselves as previous examples of the blighting effects of drink, the London correspondent of the Boston Advertiser says: "This predilection was happily hit off upon another evening at a temperance meeting. A person, in telling his story, said: 'My friends, three months ago I signed the pledge.' (Clapping of hands and approving cheers.) In a month afterwards, my friends, I had a sovereign in my pocket—a thing I never had before. (Clapping and loud cheering.) In another month, my friends, I had a good coat on my back—a thing I have not had before. (Cheers and clapping much louder.) A fortnight after that, my friends, I bought a coffin.' The audience began to stare here, but stopped and looked serious. 'You wonder,' continued 'the lecturer, 'why I bought a coffin.' Well, my friends, I bought a coffin because I felt pretty certain that if I kept the pledge another fortnight, I should want one."

DEATH BY THE PULPIT.—A solemn and impressive event occurred recently in the Baptist Church, Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. After the sermon Rev. Mr. Crawley addressed the congregation, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh," when he fell down and instantly fell from his seat—a corpse.

THE undersigned is positively instructed by the proper authority, to close the agency in the city for receipt of loan on stock, and for surrendered stock, on the FIRST PAY OF JUNE NEXT. The instruction will positively be complied with. It does not apply, however, to parties at a distance, who may be making loans or sending stock, or those whose certificates of stock were sent some months since to the office at Marsha'l, and have not yet been returned.

Continued favorable action on the part of New Orleans holders, who are in no haste to have the greatest sufferers in the misfortunes and alleged mismanagement of the road, will have the effect of some stock holders at other points, and all the President of the Company in his negotiations.

The undersigned is directed to respectfully call the attention of stockholders who have not as yet made the loan, or surrender of stock, to the stipulated pro rata and resolution, passed at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held at Marshall, on the 15th of April last. The Board claim to have amply provided for carrying out this branch of the "new policy."

"And whereas many of the stockholders of the company have made in the late elections a loan of fifty cents per share upon each share held by them, to aid and help the company to protect their interests against the demands of creditors and of adverse claimants: and whereas others, who were not able to make the loan were invited, and they surrendered one half of their shares to the company as a donation; and whereas others have neither made the loan nor the surrender of stock, but have stood aloof, not willing to risk, but seemingly willing to accept the beneficial results of other stockholders' labor and money. Now, be it resolved, That each such stockholder who has failed to make the loan nor the surrender of stock in the manner required by the resolutions, now indispensable to the relief and security of the company, and the advancement of the enterprise."
