These accumulations may form fibrocystic lumps, breast gland hyperplasia, etc. Without cleaning or other treatment, these accumulations may lead to atypical ductal hyperplasia (precancerous stage), or DCIS (ductal carcinoma in situ) with or without microcalcifications, or even breast cancer (stage 0). The cleansing actions gradually eliminate all benign lumps that are not completely calcified, or slow down the accumulation of the abnormalities, so that the mammary gland ducts and adjacent lymphatic ducts and nodes will stay clean, or return to their original cleanness, thus the symptoms disappear.
