Mr Marcier objected that the said liberties had not one single coul to its credit in the treasury—bow could we puy that account since they only possess a few notes, the whole amount of which could not puy their debts. He again bord it was necessary to levy a tax. As he is well known to be fond of anecdotes, he will relate one. Bong in New York in the year 1825, he was astemaked to seculi the streets of that city overrun by logs, 6-c. He inquired of Mr Buld-win, then city recorder, how such an abuse could be tulerated; when he was an-wered that if an aldernian ventured to Te believed that certain members (in the appre hensi n of the forthcoming elections), dere not tell their constituents 'pay your own debts out of your own pack-Mr Dixon would not consent to the levying of that tax which in his upinion is useless. He contended that there were some districts which paid more taxes than received benefits. For instance the district he represents pays $4,800 for cabatet because and is only lighted with 10 lamps. Mr Caidweil con-idered the question as a very plain one. Shall we pay or not to an honest and industrio money justly due him, when we can do it. He thought the

(For the Bea.) On Tuesday evening last we witnessed the first represen-tation of the melo-drams of the Mislotce Bough, founded on T. Haynes Bayley's besutiful balled of that name. Owing to the extreme inclamency of the weather. The house was thinly though respectably attended, and we feared that the tenal concountant of a small audience, want of spirit on th part of the interest would be the consequence, thus matrin the effect to be expected from the interest of the subject, on the effect to be expected from the interest of the susject, and the known talents of the dramatier. Whate happy to wate that our expectations, were most agreably disappointed, and in the thrilling interest excited during the gradual development of the plot, we forgot alike the author and the scior, and were only alive to the passing incidence of the moment. Mr. Williamson who has become a decided favorite with a New Orleans audience, as well for the propriety of his acting as for the admirable taster though displayed in the style in which be demand the characters on this occusion. Percentaged which he dresses his characters, on this occasion surpasses, himself. In the first act we saw him as the young Lore Lovel, in the price and strength of youthful manhood; the happy and ardent lover, unconscious that fate had an arrow in its quiver to be directed against him future welfare, and in its quiver to be directed against his future welfare, and forever destroy the budding flower of his happiness; in the second we beheld the tottering old man, a its borne down, by the weight of years and misfurtune. While thus, and upon the once gay, but now deserted and timeswere scene of his youthful, joys and misfortune, the rominiscences of the past are synkened within him, and Mr. Williamson here introduces with great effect the appropriate song of 'Oft in the stilly night.'

The other parts were well represented by Messia Bannis-ler, Radeliffe, Mendames Crouke, Rowe, etc., they seemed pleased with their respective parts; and performed them with spirit and propriety.

We were particularly pleased with the closing scene of each act, both concluding amidst virgumetances of overwhelming interest. meiming interest.

During the progress of the first act, and after the performance of the marriage estembny, synning the fertivities which occur on the occusion, the play of 'Hide and seek' is propose ed by the bride, who accordingly departs for the purpose of concenting herself.
