The New Orleans Bee.

Office, 73 Chartres street. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 23, 1861. Vol. XVII—New Series. Vol. XXXIII.—Whole No. 11,915.

THE DAILY BEE. PUBLISHED BY G. F. WEISSE & CO. F. WEISSE. H. DUFOUR.

Daily Paper, one year (in advance)..... $10
Daily, 6 months..... 5

In all cases, subscribers must give one week's notice in writing before they can be allowed a discontinuance of any person remaining in paper through error of the carrier or otherwise, will be considered as a subscriber, and obliged to pay, unless due notice is given of the fact to the office.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 23.

SUBSCRIPTIONS BY THE WEEK

The carriers of the BEE are authorized to receive subscriptions to our paper, at the rate of 25 cents a week, payable in all cases to the carriers themselves.

Sales at Auction To-Day.

By Holcomb & Co., at 10 o'clock, at No. 28 Custom-house street, foreign and American dry goods, parasols, umbrellas, &c.

By C. E. Fortatall, at 12 o'clock, at the St. Louis Exchange, a creole negro girl.

By N. Viguie, at 12 o'clock, at the St. Louis Exchange, valuable property on the upper side.

By the Sheriff, at 10½ o'clock, at 22 Jefferson street, jewelry, clocks, shirt-bosoms, &c.

By F. Fernandez, at 10 o'clock, at the corner St Louis and Chartres streets, flannel shirts and undershirts, &c., also shoes, clothing, fancy goods, &c.

By N. Viguie, at 1 P. M., in front of the St. Louis Hotel, a desirable house and lot, also, at 12 o'clock, a good cook, washer and ironer, with her two children; also, one half of a brick building, corner Treme and Barracks streets.

By N. Viguie will sell this day, at the St. Louis Exchange, a large tract of land, with a spacious old building on the Bay road, the site of Claiborne street, a desirable country brick dwelling, being located at the corner of Toulouse and Dauphin streets; an elegant one-story brick dwelling-house fronting on Dauphin street, and a few talented slaves, well known in this city. For particulars see our columns of auction sales.

WHAT TENDER SOLICITUDE!

The benevolence of our Black Republican brethren towards the South is perfectly overwhelming. Although they proclaim her to be self-willed, erring, deluded, and bent upon her own ruin and destruction, their inexhaustible love still clings to her, and can scarcely be brought to harbor the thought of separation In spite of their hatred to slavery, the Black Republicans, with a disinterested affection may velous to contemplate, are anxious to keep the South in the Union, not of course for any benefit they may derive, or from any aggrandizement of the Administration of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, but purely and exclusively for the advantage to the South herself. This is clearly demonstrated in sundry weighty articles we have consulted in sundry leading Black Republican sheets recently penned in Black Republican sheets. In one of them, which makes a great show of moderation, and exhibits extraordinary kind ness, the South is solemnly warned just like the truant schoolboy who insists upon discarding the guidance and counsels of his teacher. The South is assured of her weakness and incapacity She is reminded of all she owes the North She cannot walk alone, but must be supported on Northern crutches. She is foolish enough to desire to secede for her dear. The expenses of an independent government will eat up her resources, while her tariff laws and regulations will deprive her of the Northern commerce by which she has hitherto thriven A thousand tender admonitions are lavished upon the South, and she is entreated to pause, and return to her duty.

What a pity it is that we in the South should remain blind and insensible to those evidences of unselfish attachment! What a shame, too, that we will persist in our obstinate disbelief of the sincerity of these professions! It may be perhaps considered an illustration of monstrous ingratitude and innate depravity in the South, but, strange to relate, the people of that section really believe that when the North talks in the aforesaid fashion, it is only seeking to throw dust in the eyes of the South If the Black Republicans really imagined that the withdrawal of the Southern States would entail upon them the half the woes and evils enumerated, if they thought that such an act would hasten the extinction of slavery, diminish the production of South-ern staples, and gradually bring about our decadence in wealth and power, they would hail secession as the greatest of possible blessing, and would not for a finger's breadth desire to behold the calamity and dissolution fall upon the South, and their principal reason for seeking to compel us to remain in the Union is that they foresee that the consummance of the connection will thus ultimately work these very disasters

When the Northern press throws aside its hypocritical professions, and endeavors to look at the consequences of Southern independence with an unsanctified vision, it sees looming through the vista of the future a spectacle of fearful import, which has rarely presented, and which we present a frank utterance to the New England sheet, which even in distant Maine is still enabled, by the light of reason and reflection, duly to discern what the South will hereafter become. The article is from the Bangor Union:

THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY.—Were we to venture a prediction, we would say that we here have the germs of a republic, which will, at no far distant day, be one of the most powerful and wealthy of ancient and modern times. It will grow, and that too rapidly, by additions from the North, and from South, and from the West. Its Government, purged of every notion of consolidation, no State will hesitate to take shelter under its wings from any fear of losing the sovereignty of the States, when that Government will be light. It will be administered according to the Southern idea. In the exercise of its powers it will be confined to those that are delegated in the sphere of the Constitution It will not be used as an engine of corruption It will not be used as an instrument of exercising favors to political leaders, or to secure Governmental or individual enterprises. It will build up railroads and canals. It will undertake to build up no manufacturing. It will not act on the absurd principle that a revenue is the incidence will be light, and consequently the trade will be to any or quite free.

Capital, which has in the last three quarters of a century been migrating in Northern cities, will begin to turn Southward. By degrees, the trade of Boston, New York and Philadelphia and the whole chain of Northern Charleston, Savannah, Mobile and New Orleans will proportionately increase. Immigration will also turn southward. The South has lost, strenuously as she has fought, her largest and best customer. Our future we may read in the past of Canada Negro sympathy, which has of late been so active with us, will in a few months be dissipated. It is a fable that a nation supported on Northern crutches. The foolish farce of secession will last