[illegible] Speech [illegible]

THE END OF THE UNION MOVEMENT.

The Union as a separate Union organization would seem to have been knocked in the head at the late [illegible] meeting, most of the South-[illegible] opposed to its measures, in which the plat[illegible] State was unanimously recommended [illegible] patriotic resolutions were adopted [illegible] the true business of those Conventions [illegible] to make appointments of persons to [illegible] Nashville Convention, and with the consent of Mr. Clay, to have a more extended and careful report of the [illegible] especially of Mr. Clay's remarks, which we publish below, and which may be regarded as authentic, having, besides the authority of Mr. Ewing, the sanction of Senator Jones, to whom the report has been examined and approved.

Mr. Kossuth was introduced by Mr. Cass at about three o'clock.

On being presented to Mr. Clay, who rose to receive him, "Sir," said he, "I thank you for the honor of this interview."

"I beg you to believe," said Mr. Clay, inter rupting him, "that it is I who am honored. Will you be pleased to be seated?"

After the mutual interchange of civilities, [illegible] was said, and Mr. Clay, "an apology for not having acceded before to the desire you were kind enough to intimate more than once to me. But really my health has been so feeble that I did not dare to hazard the excitement of so interesting an interview. Besides, [illegible] be added with some pleasantry, your [illegible] and fascinating eloquence has more [illegible] than a portion of our people, whose [illegible] have come, and even some of our members of Congress," waving his hand towards the [illegible] of those gentlemen who were present, [illegible] to counteract the impression which you might shake my faith in some principles in regard to the foreign policy of this government which I have long and constantly cherished. And in regard to this matter, you will allow me, I hope, to speak with that sincerity and candor which becomes the interest of the subject and [illegible] and especially in her infinite [illegible] and [illegible] her weakness, which was the result of the [illegible] of Constantinople by Russia.

And here, apparently in allusion to Mr. Clay's [illegible] of our being unable to effect any thing in a European war, he spoke of the material and which might be rendered Turkey in a war with Russia by a naval force for the protection of her capital. After a series of entertaining and instructive remarks about the condition and prospects of Europe generally, he rose to depart.

Mr. Clay rose and bade him farewell forever, [illegible] the utmost cordiality, and the kindest sympathy became in his face and suffusing his eye, and grasping Kossuth's hand, he said, "God bless you and your family. God bless your country—may she yet be free!"

Kossuth, apparently [illegible] by the warm and earnest manner of Mr. Clay, exhibited [illegible] his suffering family and country, profoundly bowed, pressed Mr Clay's hand to his heart, and replied in tones of deep emotion, "I thank you, my father, for your kind words. From my very day, that your health may be restored and that God may prolong your life!" Mr. Clay's eyeballed with tears, he again pressed the hand which clasped his own, probably for the last time, but could say no more.

Mr. Clay closed one of the most interesting scenes it has ever been the fortune of the writer to witness. Two such men rarely meet in this world. The one having finished the course of his destiny, the other in the full vigor of his [illegible] and [illegible] of our country, and offering the best [illegible] his country's welfare, and with a [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and
