WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 15, 1833.

FOR GOVERNOR:

J. B. DAWSON.

We close this day the promulgation of the laws, passed at the late session of the legislature. It shall, in a few days, complete their publication in pamphlet form.

Walsh no mail yesterday.

Appointment by the Governor.

L. B. Allbritton, Esq. a commissioner for receiving subscriptions to the Commercial Bank of New-Orleans, in place of T. M. Beale, Esq. resigned.

A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce states, on undoubted authority, that Mr. Livingston goes to France and Mr. Lane succeeds him in the treasury department, and that W. J. Duane, Esq. of Philadelphia, is mentioned as the person, who is to assume the functions of treasurer.

Mr. Leigh, the late ambassador to the empire of South Carolina, has been nominated as a candidate to the presidency. A correspondent of the Petersburgh Intelligencer alleges that it is a nomination, which will not receive the sanction of the people of that state: we believe this averment as stoutly as we believe the impossibility of a square circle.

Going to the wall of nullification.—The late speaker of the house of representatives, Andrew Stevenson, has been returned to congress, by the Richmond district of Virginia, by a majority of five hundred votes. The imposing attitude of Virginia towards the usurpations of nullification, this is one of the most formidable which has been erected against nullification in that state. The speaker was not with deadly hostility by the sectarians of the Carolina doctrines; but Virginia is still what she has been one of the brightest gems in the tiara, which encircled the brow of the nation: she is true to the core. The resolution of right has obtained a tremendous defeat in the election of Mr. Stevenson, one of the most steadfast champions of the confederacy. We learn from the Richmond Enquirer, that there will be a decided and overwhelming majority, in the next legislature against nullification.—Again we say Virginia is true, back-bone, vertebræ and all; she is opposed to the mad doctrines of mad Carolina, and devoted to the rights and to the union of the states.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

A slip from the office of the Savannah Georgian of May 5, contain the following intelligence from Europe, by the ship Olive Branch, captain Dyer, which arrived there on the 4th from Liverpool; whence she left on the 27th of March.

From the London Times,

PORTUGAL.

From our Falmouth correspondent.

FALMOUTH, Sunday afternoon, March 24.

The lord of the Isles, steamer arrived here this afternoon from Vigo, with several passengers, and by her we have received full confirmation of the news relative to an attempt, on the 8th instant, on the part of Don Miguel's forces, to take the Fox, and of their being repelled with considerable loss. From conversation with some of the passengers, who left Oporto on the 9th, we learn that Mardus had safely landed 400 troops, and that a great quantity of provisions and bullocks had also been landed. The accounts which they give of the state of Oporto are by no means so gloomy as had been entreated in the London papers. Although a scarcity of fresh provisions had been much felt, yet there were at least sufficient supplies of fish, salt meat, rice and oil, for three months subsistence. In fine weather the landing of provisions from vessels off Oporto could be effected without difficulty, particularly at night. The lord of the Isles left Vigo on the 17th; at which time the squadron of admiral Sartorious was lying here. The dissatisfaction which had prevailed had, in a great measure, subsided, and the ships were in the most effective state, and only waited the settlement of the weather to proceed to sea.

It appears to be the decided opinion of those who came from Oporto in this steamer that it is quite impossible for Don Miguel to take Oporto, and, on the other hand, that Don Pedro's only chance of success is by a well managed and vigorous attack on Miguel's forces, for which, it is stated, active preparations were going on.

Extract of a letter from Smyrna, dated February 20:—"On the evening of the 13th instant, our town surrendered to Ibrahim Pacha, who merely sent an officer to ask our governor to give up the town, which was immediately done. All the neighboring towns are under the government of [illegible] only inland duties have been taken off, [illegible] to be in favor of the new government. [illegible] we shall have a small army of 1000 m[illegible] town remains tranquil, and property perfectly safe; [illegible] the least alarm exists. All payments due this post have been suspended by arrangement.

From the Eastern Shore Whig.

STATE REFORM.—The subject of reform in the constitution and form of government of the state of Maryland, is one of too great weight and importance, to be discussed under the influence of excited passions.

It is idle for us to attempt to shut our eyes to the fact that reform, in some shape, is necessary, and will be accomplished, sooner or later. As we have before expressed it, we are greatly behind the age in the science of government. In what does our present system differ from the recent borough system of England?—The difference is hardly worth naming. And yet, when the reformers of England were contending for their rights, not a voice was raised here, but it was in prayer for their success. Why should we be anxious for the establishment of equal rights on the eastern hemisphere, and refuse the enjoyment of them ourselves? "Physician heal thyself," might with great propriety, have been retorted upon every Marylander, who was heard to speak against the rottenness of the system of England.

Reform is necessary—absolutely necessary. It is approach upon us, to continue longer a constitution so unsuited to our wants and condition. But, we are not prepared to make a surrender of our entire rights to an absolute majority, as Mr. Calhoun would express it. In whatever way we may reform our government, the establishment of ample checks, is indispensable to our happiness, and the perpetuity of our institutions.

It seems to be thought by some that any enlargement of the privileges of the larger counties and the city of Baltimore, must be regarded by the Eastern Shore as a curtailment of her rights. We cannot so view it. We would not surrender any right; but at the same time we would be just. In our love for this peninsula—our birth place—we acknowledge no superior: but we would scorn the exercise of power secured by law, but denied by justice and equity.

COMMODORE PORTER.—This gentleman has been dangerously ill. He writes to a gentleman in this city: "I have been exceedingly sick for some time past. I have just crept from the edge of the grave." It seems that the place of his abode is very unhealthy. He mentions in his letter that, from his window he sees a succession of corses, borne to the grave, and at the moment of writing, forty or fifty unburied bodies were lying in his view at the place of interment.

It seems to us, that as the trade of the Black Sea is opened to American adventure, and as the continuance of the advantages derived from our treaty with the Sultan, as well as the security of our commerce in those new seas, will depend upon the maintenance of an energetic and able minister at Constantinople, provision should be made to enable the government to continue to avail itself of the services of such a man as Commodore Porter. We do not believe, however, that this distinguished individual can be induced to remain long in his present position, unless provision is made to render his stay more comfortable—or at least, more tolerable.—Globe.

United States Consuls Abroad.—We are indebted to a highly intelligent merchant of this city, for the subsequent remarks:—

The operation of Mr. Clay's modification bill, which goes into effect after December next, must, as it appears to us, lead to the necessity of Consul's certificates to all invoices, on which duties are to be paid, as well in cases of specific duties, as now in cases of ad. val. duty. Something like this course must be adopted to enable the collectors to adjust the surplus over 20 per cent. from which surplus a reduction of 10 per cent on 31st December next, is to be made; consequently, a proof of the cost of goods must be furnished.

There will be, no doubt, some puzzling cases, which will tax the skill of the Treasury Department in adjusting—particularly in articles where there exists a conventional value—say, for instance, cotton goods, costing not exceeding 30 cents per square yard, shall be deemed to have cost that sum and duty is calculated accordingly. Now such articles may not cost more than 10 cents actually, then we have two values—an actual value and a convention value.

The new bill makes no explanation of this matter, and would leave, as it appears to us, a right with the merchant to claim the reduction on the basis of actual value. See 1st section 2d March, 1833.

From the New Haven (Conn.) Herald.

United States Circuit Court.—This court commences its spring session in New Haven on Monday. Judge Thompson presiding. Isaac Evarts will take his trial before this court, for an alleged murder on the high seas, on board the ship Cronant, of Mystic. The prisoner is committed here and the witnesses are in attendance for that purpose.

It is understood, also, that the case of Foster, vs. Hunt—which involves the constitutionality of the law against [illegible] will come on this term. This case, from the circumstance that the plaintiff's wife had been stopped and detained on the Sabbath, while in all [illegible] and duties a few miles of her father's house, to which she was going from her residence in New York, has excited considerable interest abroad,—and voluntary aid has been offered in several instances to bring the principle to the test of a legal issue. We believe there is a decision of Massachusetts against the legality of the act.—Herald.

We have no intention of discussing this subject—our only object in this article is, to congratulate our friends abroad, on the progress which seems to be held out, affording short a route as one of the seat of office, in lieu of salary—and the other requisitions; many of them for years past, have labored for the discharge of their duties. Many of those still remained, who deserve good emoluments, who, for years, have not made a sufficiency to meet the cost of classic [illegible] stationary.)

From the Tuscaloosa Sentinel, April 23.

Mr. Frothingham.—We briefly alluded in our last paper to the sudden disappearance, on the 8th inst. of Joseph L. Frothingham, who was about to enter the Oneida Institute in Whitesboro. On that day (the 8th) he had been to this city, and received about seventy dollars in cash at one of the banks. In the evening he was in his room at the boarding house (Miss Crane's) writing to his father; being in want of light he stepped out, as is supposed, to procure some candles, and from that time to this he has not been heard from. No alarm was inspired by his absence, as it was supposed he had gone to lodge at the Institute, or with some friend in the neighborhood. Several days elapsed without any notice being taken of his absence.—Feeling surprised, however, at not hearing from him, the lady with whom he boarded mentioning his sudden and singular disappearance. A search was immediately commenced, and in consequence of some circumstances (not conclusive however) two black men were arrested. One of them was discharged—the other detained in custody, until further search or confession had elicited more certain information. Since his examination the excitement has painfully increased, by further disclosures from this black man, whose name is George Hazard. He now states, that on the Saturday succeeding the disappearance of Frothingham, he was hired by a certain tavern keeper in Whitesboro, to take the body of Frothingham to this city and throw it into the Mohawk. He states that he took the body late in the night, from the hayloft of this man into a single horse wagon, and brought it to this city, and threw it into the river from the lower bridge (known as Miller's bridge.) There were, as he declares, no weights attached to the body; the feet only being tied together.

Immediate on the disclosure of this confession, great numbers came from Whitesboro and, together with persons from this city, commenced dragging the river below the bridge. The testimony of the negro was confirmed by the appearance of blood on the wagon, whip and harness.—We are not, however, sufficiently informed as to the testimony, to state that it was consistent throughout. The tavern-keeper referred to, has been placed under keepers.

The interest which has been felt by the citizens in this vicinity has been increased by minute examinations of the letters of Frothingham, and inquiries as to his character and circumstances. His family reside in Salem, Mass. and are respectable and in good circumstances.

FROM SMYRNA.

A letter from the junior editor of the Boston Courier, dated Smyrna, Feb. 15, says:

"We expect the Egyptian troops here—perhaps hourly—they are within a day's march. There is a perfect apathy in the city on the subject. There can be no resistance, for the inhabitants [illegible] the Pacha as they have every where else, and the whole Turkish force here is only eight hundred ineffective troops, who are as likely to fight for one side as the other. We can give you no certain news.—There is a "journal" published ostensibly every Sunday, but it appears with no regularity, and most commonly in the middle of the week. There can be no such thing as a Price Current of such a market. The country is entirely unsettled. There has not one large caravan entered the city for three months, the camels being all employed by the armies, nor have any products been sent from the interior. Business is entirely at a dead stand still. There is nothing doing."

Our latest newspaper from Smyrna is dated Sunday, February 10, and as we have accounts from that place of a much later date, by the way of French newspapers, it contains, of course, no news. It has been reported, on the authority of a commercial letter dated Trieste, March 12, that Ibrahim Pacha entered Smyrna after the 20th of February, with thirty thousand men, but the account appears to want confirmation. The Journal de Smyrne of the 7th February, says he is waiting at Koniah for orders from his father. The editor of the New York Courier & Enquirer acknowledges the receipt of a newspaper from Trieste of the 22d February, which says: "That an Egyptian general and a small suite had arrived there with a flag of truce for the purpose of announcing the approach of a corps of cavalry from the army of Ibrahim; the town is quiet and prepared to receive them without resistance." Other letters speak of the march of Ibrahim on Smyrna, after having taken possession of Brussa. "It is evident," says the Courier & Enquirer, "that Smyrna was not in possession of the Egyptians on the 20th February, although it would not be surprising that this army should have continued its march in advance, during the close of the month of February, as it was only between the 22d and 24th of that month, that the convention was concluded at Constantinople, of which the object was the arrest its progress."

The plague had entirely disappeared at Smyrna, and the whole European population was free to join in the festivities of the carnival season, with with perfect freedom.—Courier.

The following sketch by a correspondent of the N. Y. American, is from personal observation. Mehemet Ali is one of the great captains of the age; and an authentic description of him will be interesting to our readers:

As our public prints have, for the last few years contained so many accounts of the success of Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt, I have thought that some notice of this extraordinary man would not be unacceptable to your readers.

Mehemet Ali, whose age is esteemed at 64, is a short, thick, fat man; his face, notwithstanding the appendage of an imposing beard, bears the stamp of benevolence and good nature, though the incidents of his adventurous life would seem to prove, that he possesses neither the one nor the other of these virtues. He is perfectly plain in his manners and dress, and admits freely into his presence, the European consuls and merchants who reside at his court. He is by no means austere to his dependants, but exacts from them the most unqualified deference.

When at Alexandria, he devotes the whole day to business. After the usual hour of audience, which is at 8 in the morning, he inspects the naval arsenal and the ships under equipment, examining every department in person, encouraging and rewarding the diligent, and punishing the idle. He dines at noon; and sometimes indulges in a short nap after dinner, and then resumes the business of the day. At 8 o'clock in the evening, the male members of the household are assembled to perform their evening devotions in the great hall of the palace to witness which, strangers are, without hesitation, admitted.

When the prayers are ended, the Pacha receives in his splendid saloon those foreign officers and consuls who may feel disposed to converse freely with him, unrestrained by the forms of etiquette and ceremony. With these he is perfectly familiar, putting to all strangers who approach him various questions relating to the government, commerce, military and naval affairs of their respective countries. By such means he has acquired much information, which he is engaged to retain by the aid of a most tenacious memory. He can neither read nor write: and yet, there is not a more accurate diplomatist living.

Mehemet Ali is an admirable horseman, and possessing as he does the most reckless bravery, he has recently been known to say, that when mounted on one of his favorite Arabians, he considers himself still a match for a dozen of Turks. Although several unsuccessful attempts have been made by various means to get rid of this dangerous and powerful enemy of the imperial sultan, he appears entirely free from that nervous fear of assassination, so generally noticed in persons who, like him, have been elevated to similar high stations; amidst revolution and bloodshed.

Commercial.

By the Olive Branch, Savanah.

LIVERPOOL, March 26.—There has been less demand for cotton during the last week, and spinners have declined purchases under the present firm tone of holders, but from your side we may now look for a brisk trade more enquiry.

March 27.—So far this week very little has been doing in cotton, Boweds in particular. Orleans are a little lower. Spinners look to a change of wind, bringing large supplies, and there was but a flat market yesterday in Manchester. The demand must however come round, as their stocks are small. The sales since the 23d are some 5000 bales. The enquiry for Sea Islands is also in a great measure subsided, the common sorts are much wanted, and can be no lower.

The easterly winds keep out vessels, and the New-York packet of the 24th has not arrived. The market for goods and yarns was rather flat yesterday in Manchester, and the sales of cotton have been small for the two days of this week. The funds in London are rather droopy, owing it is thought to the expected clamor in parliament against the taxes &c. The 10 hour "labor time" in factories if carried into parliament may also tend to check the consumption for cotton, although half the summer may pass away before the bill will go into operation; at all events we wish to show you the cautious side of the question.
