DEMAGOGUEISM.

The writers and spouters in behalf of locofocoism have, from the start, evinced an admirable degree of cunning in the formation of their plans to deceive the unwary. Knowing that few, comparatively speaking, of the voters have time to undertake an elaborate investigation of political matters, they resort to plausible theories in support of their dogmas, well aware that truth and reason are weapons with which they may not, with safety, engage their opponents.

The peculiarity of locofoco warfare is strangely developed in the efforts so generally employed to convince the people that the late Bank of the United States of Pennsylvania was a National Bank. The name of that institution was its only characteristic of a National Bank, and one might, with as much propriety contend that one of our State institutions was a National one, because it is denominated the "Union Bank," as to contend that the Pennsylvania institution was in any respect such.

The National Bank of the United States was, up to the close of its existence, sound and undoubted, notwithstanding the unrelenting and protracted war waged against it by Gen. Jackson and his pack of political bloodhounds. The State institution which succeeded it, however, possessing more of the characteristics of its predecessor, fell a prey to the unmitigated persecution of its relentless enemy. If the hero of so many wars can in his retirement, contemplate with self complacency the consequences of this his last war, we do not envy him his disposition If the wail of widows and orphans beggared to appease his thirst for revenge, is the kind of music which suits his taste, he is welcome to the enjoyment of it.

Let the planter, the merchant, the mechanic, the laborer, contrast his condition under a national bank with his present position, and then judge of the cause of the change, according to the dictates of reason.—The locofoco doctrine has always been that the merchants were the enemies of the agriculturalists, mechanics and laborers. Well, the merchants have been frustrated, and have these classes benefitted thereby? Has not his blight fallen upon all classes alike? There is a sympathy which pervades all classes, from the highest to the lowest, to such an extent that the prosperity or adversity of one class will sooner or later affect the prosperity or adversity of all classes.

The merchant, while successful, gives employment to hundreds of mechanics, laborers, draymen and others; when ruined he becomes penniless and can, therefore, contribute nothing towards the support of others.—Whatever demagogues may say to the contrary, this is a proposition, the truth of which must be admitted by every man who will take the trouble to reflect a moment.

Free trade has been a prominent feature of locofoco policy, but all parties are now awakening to the conviction that a protective tariff is the true policy.

The same party has long contended that a national bank was hostile to their interest, but the time is not distant when they will discover that prosperous times can never be restored without the aid of such an institution.

The people have for many years suffered themselves to be misled by artful demagogues, but they will eventually discover that their prosperity—nay, their very existence as free and independent citizens, demands the exercise of their own judgment in political matters.

What they would not see they must soon or do now feel, and self-interest will induce them to investigate the cause which lies at the root of the reverses they have experienced.
