by the constitution was to count the votes in a convention of Both houses and declars the result. The constitution measures it will be necellected, contains only two disqualifications upon this subject: the first and most important of which is, that no constor or representative in congress should be appointed an elector of president or vice president of the United States. For what purpose was this disqualification but to exclude congress from any perticipation in the appointment, and to guard against the pensition in the appointment, and to guard against the pensition to the first persident of the day were too segminum not to know that in deciding so important an election as that of president of such a nation, we recall it a periods of great solitical cariespont, intrigue lly at periods of great political excitement, intrigue ambition would have their influence, if they did not and sembition would have their innection, a may use many appearance powers the decision; and that individual interest might pre- and the ill was seen their semants of the control of the semants of the

In this scattment we are quite sure of representatives! In the sentiment we are quite sure a large portion of the American people will concur, and it is therefore egainst the dangers and evils of such an election, that the liberal and subglittened of all parties should be most anxious to guard. Nor is this view weakened by the fact that the handlest has been been by Concress is authorized by the conharmost o guard. Ator is this view workened by the con-bituities! It may be asked we know, as it has been asked, why the segacity of the wise framers of that instrument old ney inc segecity of the wise tramers of that instrument our neet foresee these slarming consequences, and provice some uther remedy? The answer is a plain one—they never imagined the occasion would arise when its exercise would be required. Indeed so remote was believed to be the possibility of an election of president by the house of representatives, that the celebrated triumvirate of '76 (with James Madison as their head) in defending the various provisions of the constitution of From the Salliment Republication, August 11.
