THE VICISSITUDES OF WAR.

The contrast between the news brought by the Baltic, and the more recent accounts by the America, is striking indeed. The victories achieved by the French upon the assumption of the chief command by PELISSIER, seemed the prelude to more brilliant triumphs, and the sanguine amongst us did not hesitate to predict the speedy fall of that proud fortress which for over a year had defied the united armies of France, England and Turkey. The capture of the Mamelon was a great exploit. In two days the indomitable French had accomplished what, under the more timid counsels of his predecessor, the Allies had not even ventured to essay. No wonder that the public pulse beat high with hope and expectation, and that the friends of the Allies felt certain that the change in the leadership of the Armies was the inauguration of a new and splendid era of victorious victories.

But the reverse of the medal was soon to be exposed. We had not yet received the details of the terrible conflict which resulted in the capture of the Mamelon, when the telegraph brought us a disastrous narrative. The Mamelon retaken; the Allies repulsed in an attempt to capture the Malakoff; the English butchered by thousands; Sir COLIN CAMPBELL and more than seventy officers numbered with the dead; Assaults exaggerated. A triple reverse have we here, to counterbalance the advantages previously secured by the Allies. Such are the vicissitudes of war.

We are scarcely surprised at the failure of the Allies to take the Malakoff, since it is an immensely strong fortification, erected in the most approved style of defense, largely supplied with guns, and manned with a considerable body of Russian troops. Its importance, in connection with the Redan, as the main protection of Sebastopol on the South, is such, that nothing which nature could supply, or art invent, has been omitted in adding to its strength. That a fortress so absolutely indispensable to the safety of the city would be defended with even more than usual valor and obstinacy was certain. Equally sure was it that the expectation of storming it would be dangerous, doubtful and almost desperate. We were, therefore, not unprepared to hear that the Allies had been repulsed, nor would we be at all astonished to learn that the attack had been unsuccessfully renewed. But we believe that the Malakoff Tower will be ultimately taken. Gen. PELISSIER is not the man to abandon an enterprise of such magnitude on account of one or two failures. The bulldog tenacity and courage of the British, refused to turn by disaster, will make them cling with eager impatience for a renewal of the fray. We look, therefore, for the advices by the next steamer, now nearly due, in the full confidence that we shall hear of more sanguinary battles, and possibly of Russian reverses.

Meanwhile, the re-possession of the Mamelon by the Russians, the re-occupation of Anapa, and the repulse of the British before the Malakoff, place the Allies in nearly the same position in which they stood when Gen. PELISSIER assumed the command; and from the present aspect of affairs, Sebastopol is as far from being taken as ever. What a siege this has been, and let it terminate as it may, history will transmit it to posterity as one of the most extraordinary on record. No beleaguered fortress has ever been so absolutely defended, and so pertinaciously attacked. None has ever caused so terrible an effusion of blood. The soil of the Crimea had been fertilized by human gore, while its air reeks with the infectious exhalations from unburied corpses. Almost every inch of the ground stretching from Sebastopol to the extreme limits of the enemy's lines out of the Allies, covers a corpse. The siege of Sebastopol has proved a war of giants. Four nations have combined their armaments and power, and have not yet succeeded in shaking that mighty rampart of granite which rears its white walls in front of their combined lines. The siege has been fruitful in every element of war; in the highest active courage, and the noblest spirit of endurance; in the most wonderful intrepidity, and the most indomitable zeal; in the truest strategy, the most skillful attacks, and the most vigorous and protracted resistance. And still Sebastopol stands! Which it ever, will it fall?

The True Delta asks us to state emphatically that it is not determined to get rid of the nominations made, by remodelling the ticket, and expunging Maj Joseph Hong from its head. We would certainly inform our contemporary with the greatest pleasure, if we only knew. The True Delta is probably aware that all nominations for city officers made by the American party must, by the Constitution of the Order be submitted to the next meeting of the members for confirmation. How whose side is done, our brother of the press will have just as good an opportunity as any enjoyed by us of ascertaining the popular will touching the city nominations. But this is apart from the great subject of controversy, which was whether or not the American Convention had authorized in any manner whatever to upset the city nominations. We affirm most positively that it did not—that the notices will not have been published only until two days after the Free Delta and Courier assumed that it had been done—that when harmonized, it was referred by the city delegation as a matter concerning them, and not the Convention.

As for the shameful decision of the American party of New Orleans renouncing the city nominations, our contemporary has nearly as much reason of thankfulness that we have. All we can say is that we have endeavored to prove by its relation to their ticket, and that we trust it will be sealed to the preservation of the harmony of the whole party.

ELECTION FOR ALDERMAN.—There is an election for Alderman to be held in the First District on to-day, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of I. B. PLAUCHÉ. We perceive that WM. P. CONSTANTIN has been placed in nomination, and we take it will be chosen without opposition. Mr. CONSTANTIN has gentlemanly manners, excellent capacities and high reputation—just one of those stable and safe citizens whom we need in the Council at the present time. The success of the First Ward should give him their unanimous support.

BLACKWOOD FOR JULY.—We are indebted to JOHN BOUSSARD, Exchange Place, for the July number of Blackwood. It contains a capital review of Kinglake's work; an article on the Baltic in 1854; the conclusion of Kaloon; political articles, and a variety of the usual miscellany.

DEBOW'S REVIEW.—Our thanks are due E. Johnson & Co., 86 Camp street, for the July number of this excellent publication. Its contents are as follows: Recent growth of New Iberia Sugar Country; Rise and Progress of The Future of Free Society; The Sunny and the Dusky Republics; Economic Resources of Alabama; Commerce, Navigation and Finance of the Government; Internal Improvements; Agriculture and Miscellaneous, &c., &c.

DAVID PAUL BROWN, of Philadelphia, is about to become an author. He has in press a book entitled "The Forensic or Forty Years Full Practice at the Bar." The Philadelphia Inquirer says: Something rich and racy may be expected. It will contain thoughts, anecdotes, and reminiscences of men and measures connected with the professional life of Mr. BROWN, who has been for upwards of forty years, and may be justly so styled, the leading member of the bar of this city. The long and distinguished career of this gentleman has been in a peculiar degree favorable to the acquisition of the most brilliant and entertaining anecdotes, and has had opportunities of collecting together an immense mass of useful information of history of the law and the lawyers.

THE BRITISH MINISTER.—Mr. Crampton, charged by the Know Nothings with being a party to the enlistment of recruits in this country for the British army, left New Orleans yesterday morning, by the R. R. Railway, for Jackson, Miss., whether he goes after Brothers or Know Nothings, Pontiac's view of this transaction is not known. Mr. Crampton will be back in a few days, and will then be at the Royal Hotel, Jackson.
