has yet been discovered of the wreak of that noble steamer.

The Cape de Verda are situated about N. lat. 16 and W. long. 23. If the casks and boat were picked up any where in that vicinity, they must have drifted a great distance from the piace where the steamer foundered, which indeed was to be expected. It is generally supposed that she went down during the gale which occurred on the second or third day after her departure from the part.

From the Frederick (IVa.) Examiner, Feb. 9.

ATROCIOUS OUTRAGE.

We have been informed of a sories of outrages which transpired last week, in the neighboring county of Jefferson in Virginia, the atrocity of which is fully equal to that of the secence of blood and lawlessness which have herestofore been peculiar to the half civilingly regions of the southern and south-western portion of our country.
