In a conversation I held to-day with one of these men, he admitted that no man ever retired from tha Presidency with a largar share of the benedictions of the people than did Mr. Fillmores. It was universally conceded, he and, that he was an able, upright, jest, firm and patriotic President; and but for the continuous which has a srisen at the North would have been more popular. And yet, I replied, he has taken no part in this matter whatever, No, said my colloquist; but the people at the North are determined to have some one who sympathiase with them on this subject; whe will advocate the restoration of the Missouri Compromise; they are afraid Mr. Fillmore will not.
