RECEIVED AND FOR SALE at the drug store of the subscriber, several hundred bottles of the anti-phlogistic syrup of E. C. Brian.

Certificates obtained from respectable physicians of the Paris hospitals and from professors of the medical colleges and the members of the royal academy of physicians, who daily prescribe the anti-Phlogistic syrup, in consequence of its successful effects in the course of their practice, confirmed by the sanction of the learned practitioners composing the council attached to His Excellency the Minister of the Interior, agreeably to whose advice a patent right was granted by His Majesty, are sufficient testimonies of the efficacy of this medicine which possesses a decided advantage over all other syrups, when any inveterate distempers are to be contended with. It combines with mucilaginous properties that of cooling the system in general. Free from all irritating substances and abounding with mucilage, its action on the intestinal passage is similar to that of an emollient cataplasm on the skin when in a state of irritation, so much so that it cures inflammations and irritations of the stomach, bowels, kidneys, &c. Frequent cases of long existing colds terminating in diseases of the most serious nature when neglected, such as hoarseness, quinsy, croup, whooping cough, asthma, acute and chronic catarrhs, pleurisy, lung inflammations of the chest, hemoptysis, or spitting of blood. The irritations and inflammations of the chest and bowels, known under the appellation of gastritis and gastro enteritis, with or without a complication of diarrhea, dysentery, those of the skin such as erysipelas, measles, scarlet fever, and the small pox; in short, all kinds of inflammations in general, when treated with the most salutary results, when combined, by the use of this syrup with other necessary medicines, not easily enumerated—this syrup being efficient in all kinds of inflammatory diseases.
