"Truth is mighty, and will prevail."

FOR GOVERNOR
HENRY JOHNSON.

NEW-ORLEANS:
THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 27, 1841.

THE NORTH AMERICAN MAIL failed yesterday beyond Charleston.

MR. THEARD proposes to establish at Paris an agency for American journals, by which all communications between this country and France, as well as the rest of Europe, may be punctually and promptly made. He will procure subscriptions, and make collections for those papers which may appoint him their agent; he will debit sthe on their account to the different European journals; he will employ every effort to obtain exchanges; will observe the utmost regularity and exactitude in forwarding them—in a word, he will be their special agent, for an exceedingly moderate compensation.

The advantages proposed to American journals by Mr. THEARD's plans are too numerous and evident to require particular comment, and we hope too signal to be overlooked by the proprietors of papers. Of one thing we can assure our readers, viz: Of the moral qualities and intellectual capacity of the gentleman in question. His high standing as a citizen of Louisiana, and his reputation as a vigorous writer—a reputation acquired and sustained during six years of editorial labor on the "Bee"—are sufficient guarantees of his success. He is thoroughly known among the ancient population as a high minded, intelligent, honorable man, who will spare nothing in the entire and satisfactory performance of any obligation he may incur. His long connection with the press will enable him to prosecute his undertaking with that familiar knowledge and confidence which result from experience, and will afford him extraordinary facilities in carrying his views into effect.

We refer our readers to Mr. THEARD's prospectus for a detailed enumeration of the benefits derivable from his scheme. Our principal object in this notice, is to assure distant journals to who have no means of appreciating the capability of Mr. THEARD for the proposed enterprise, that in him they will find a zealous, faithful, active and intelligent agent.

☞ We are glad to see our old friend Capt. KNIGHT of the steamboat Mazeppa has resumed his regular pleasure excursions to the watering places on the Lake. Her day of departure is fixed for every Saturday at the arrival of the Lafrobel, p m, cars, at the end of the Rail Road, and she returns to town on the evening of the day following. The places where she stops being all within a very few hours journey, those of our citizens who are detained here during the summer months, will be enabled to take a little recreation which is not only delightful, but even absolutely necessary for the purposes of health—and this without trespassing on periods usually devoted to the transaction of business.

PARQUET SPRINGS.

This beautiful watering place, situated only twenty miles distance from Louisville, Kentucky, on the Salt River, and within one mile of Shepherdsville, has of late become one of the most public places of resort of the west; even taking the lead of the celebrated Harrodsburg Springs for the two past seasons. Its great variety of mineral waters, among which are the salt, sulphur and epsom, its fine fishing on the Salt river, fine hunting; there being an abundance of deer and other wild game in the adjacent hills; its delightful baths, shower, warm and vapor; its fine ten pin alley—splendid band of music—superb ball room—well supplied bar; excellent cabins and buildings in general, and its admirable accommodations are not surpassed by any watering place in the west. It is only three years since that its present proprietor, JOHN D. CRESSON, Esq. purchased the place, and commenced the improvements. The reputation of its waters is already great, and it is destined to be only second, if not equal to the White Sulphur or Saratoga Springs. I would recommend all travellers in visiting the West, to give this place a call—the charges are moderate.—Daily stages run from Louisville, besides accommodation hacks. T.

NORTH CAROLINA ELECTIONS.

The returns from the old North State are not complete, but are as favorable as the most sanguine Whig could desire. The following is the result, as far as ascertained.

In the first district, the Hon. K. RAYNER (w.) is elected.

In the second district, DANIEL (l. f.) is elected.

In the third district, STANLY (w.) re-elected.

In the fourth district WM H. WASHINGTON (w.) is elected by a considerable majority over J. O. WATSON, l. f.—a Whig gain.

In the fifth, MCKAY (l. f.) re-elected—no change.

In the sixth, ARCHIBALD ARRINGTON (l. f.) is elected, beating HAWKINS, the late member, and RUSSEL, also loco—no change.

In the seventh district, EDMUND DEBERY (w.) is re-elected by a handsome majority—no change.

In the eighth, R. M. SAUNDERS (l. f.) is elected over Dr. JAMES S. SMITH, (w.)—no change.

In the 9th district, A. H. SHEPHERD (w.) is elected over REID (l. f.) by a considerable majority—a Whig gain.

In the tenth district, ABRAM RENCHER (w.) is elected over JONATHAN WORTH—a Whig gain.

Three districts remain to be heard. Two of them will doubtless return Whigs.

The Charleston Patriot, hitherto a staunch Van Buren Journal, has taken strong ground in favor of a National Bank. This is more gratifying as Mr. CALHOUN, the editor of that paper, is known to be one of the soundest political economists in the country, and has more than once distinguished himself by his writings on this difficult science.

THE CROPS.—We learn that the late cool weather and chilling winds have done very great injury to both the cotton and corn crops in St. Johns Berkley. Some planters have had to plant cotton seed the fourth time. Charleston Courier.

ALABAMA.—The returns from Alabama exhibit a whig majority so far, but there can be little doubt of the success of the locofoco ticket throughout the state.

IMMIGRATION.

We see it stated, remarks the Baltimore American, that letters from Amsterdam and Havre, announce a very large emigration from the European continent to the United States during the coming year. A late Liverpool paper says that thirty vessels are in the London St. Catherine docks, fitting out to convey emigrants to the Sydney, New York, Canada and New-Zealand. The Scotch papers tell, there is a great movement among the people. The accounts state that some of the most respectable of the middle class of farmers and many manufacturers residing in the neighborhood of Glasgow are about to try their fortunes in the United States.

The number of emigrants that arrived at the port of New York alone, 1840, was over sixty thousand. The number for this year thus far is not equal to the arrivals for the corresponding period of 1840.

SUBMARINE EXPLORING APPARATUS.

A few weeks ago one or two very interesting and gratifying exhibitions were made at the Navy Yard, by capt. Taylor, the inventor of the submarine exploring apparatus, who, with the aid of that apparatus, descended to the bed of the Potomac, walked under water, and remained there a considerable time, while the President of the United States, the Secretary pf the Navy, the Board of Navy Commissioners, and a number of scientific gentlemen were present on the occasion, watching the progress and result of these very interesting submarine operations. It is gratifying to learn, from an authentic source, that within the last week, the United States government have adopted for the use of the Navy, Capt. Taylor's submarine exploring apparatus.

Speaking of the exhibition at the Navy Yard on Wednesday, the 21st ultimo, our correspondent remarks as follows:

"When I arrived at the Navy Yard I found our chief magistrate, (President Tyler,) the Secretary of the Navy, and several naval officers, together with a number of citizens, already assembled as observers of the novel exhibition.

"At about 2 o'clock, P. M. Capt. Taylor, having put on his submarine armor, descended to the bed of the river, where he remained several minutes; then ensued the weighing, Capt. T. rose to the surface of the river, he then descended again and walked several rods—thus showing his power of locomotion on the bottom of the river. The capt. remained 45 minutes under water and could have remained much longer.—The President, the Secretary of the Navy and the naval officers present appeared to be well satisfied with the demonstration which Capt. Taylor afforded of the practicability of his enterprise, and of its applicability to naval operations; and the captain's explanations of the different parts of his apparatus appeared to be quite lucid and satisfactory.

"Capt. Taylor next showed the power of a rocket, of certain construction to produce an upward motion; also, of another rocket, differently constructed, to produce a lateral motion; these experiments were tried on land, by launching the rockets in vessels of water. After these experiments, Capt. T. placed a rocket under the bottom of a vessel anchored in the stream, which was scattered into fragments, scarcely leaving two timbers attached to each other. A vast quantity of mud and water, from the depth of the river, was raised from thirty to fifty feet in height, carrying the mast and broken fragments of the vessel with it, thus producing a startling demonstration of the mighty force and destructive power in such missiles, used in war operations."

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American writes as follows upon the same subject:

A few days since Capt. Taylor made a full and successful experiment of his under water operations before President Tyler, the heads of the departments, and others, and blew up a large and heavy ship, which, literally tearing it into a thousand pieces, sunk it to the deep, and calling up its foundations on the surface of the water. There was no mistake and no mishap. The fragments were thrown fifty feet into the air, many of them falling more than a hundred yards from the position of the ship. It was torn into shreds. The proof was conclusive of Mr. Tayler's ability to blow up any floating craft, large or small, ship or tender. It is averred that a ship of the line can be blown up as easy as this scow was. If so, an enemy's ship at anchor had better not go to sleep while Capt. Taylor is about. Nor will her watch make any difference. It's a gone case if Capt. Taylor gets under her bottom.

You remember that this experiment was to be made in the presence of General Harrison on the day he was taken sick; that the guns were loaded to a shot; and that the same guns were not discharged till the day of the funeral, ten days subsequent. With great delicacy, President Tyler took word to have no salute on this occasion. It was an admirable touching sentiment. We would not have the same guns speak forth honors to him, which were charged to greet his predecessor, and discharged at his funeral obsequies to express a nation's grief. They were therefore spent. That order and that silence will arouse a sympathetic emotion in every American bosom for the exceeding delicate and appropriate respect for the venerated dead, which they so eloquently express. Not a single act of President Tyler has raised him higher in my esteem than this.

LIFE OF TECUMSEH.

A life of this celebrated chieftain, by the Hon. BENJAMIN DRAKE, has been lately published in Cincinnati. It is spoken of as a work of uncommon interest, executed with great ability. The biographer has bestowed infinite pains in the investigation of the character of the renowned Indian warrior, and the pages of the volume teem with anecdotes illustrative of his bravery, generosity and heroism. We extract a few of them for the amusement of our readers:

Tecumseh's efforts to abolish the burning of prisoners.

The next act in which Tecumseh participated, and in which he manifested signal prowess, was an attack made by the Indians upon some flat boats descending the Ohio, above Limestone, now Maysville. The year in which it occurred is not stated, but Tecumseh was not probably more than sixteen or seventeen years of age. The boats were captured, and all the persons belonging to them, except one, who was taken as prisoner, and afterwards burnt. Tecumseh was a silent spectator of the scene, having never witnessed the burning of a prisoner before. After it was over, he expressed, in strong terms, his abhorrence of the act, and it was finally concluded by the party that they would never burn any more prisoners; and to this resolution they all adhered, so long as they lived, however afterwards scrupulously adhered. It is not less creditable to the humanity than to the genius of Tecumseh that he should have taken this noble stand, and by the force and eloquence of his appeal, have brought his associates to the same resolution. He was then but a boy, yet he had the independence to break an inveterated custom of his tribe, and the power of argument to convince the, against all the preconceived notions of right and the rules of warfare, that the custom should be abolished. That his effort to put a stop to this cruel and revolting rite, was not prompted by any momentary impulse of feeling, but was the result of a long deep action, and a right sense of justice, is abundantly shown by his conduct towards prisoners in after life.

Singular fulfilment of a Threat.

It was Tecumseh's darling project to unite all the tribes of the South and West in the defence of their lands. To accomplish this, he visited, personally, every tribe engaging each in his plans and fixing a day when a blow was to be struck, simultaneously, along the whole of the confederacy which he sought to establish.

On his return from Florida, he went among the Creeks in Alabama, urging them to unite with the Seminoles. Arriving at Tuckhabatchee, a Creek town on the Tallapoosa river, he made his way to the lodge of the chief, Big Warrior, who had bitterly opposed his object, delivered his war talk, presented a bundle of sticks, gave a piece of wampum and a hatchet, all of which the Big Warrior took. When Tecumseh, reading the intentions and spirit of the Big Warrior, looked him in the eye, and pointing his finger towards his face, said: "Your blood is white; you have taken my talk, and will not fight; and the war dance, and the splendid band of music—superb ball room—well supplied bar; excellent cabins and buildings in general, and its admirable accommodations are not surpassed by any watering place in the west. It is only three years since that its present proprietor, JOHN D. CRESSON, Esq. purchased the place, and commenced the improvements.
