Plan for Constructing Military Rule in the South.

Misrepresentation of the real spirit and tendency of the Southern people since the close of the war is practiced systematically by the leaders of the Radical faction. They are not satisfied with the defeat of the rebellion. They are not satisfied with the universal acknowledgment of that defeat, and the frank disposition of those who were the extremest secessionists to submit to the supremacy of the National Government, and to soon their rights and perform their duties henceforth in the Union and under the Constitution. They are not satisfied with the calamities which the war has inflicted on the South, and with the burdens and restrictions on commerce and industry; and on individual enterprise and social development necessarily incident to military administration as it has been far in the mildest form survived hostilities.

They are not satisfied that the South shall have peace when there is no war; but will only be satisfied when, in addition to being conquered, disarmed, helpless, and only asking for quiet, for return for peaceful and lawful exercise, for a little hope in the future to compensate for the desolation past, the South is buried; like the Texas of old, under mountains of indignities and oppressions, and then can drink in the music of her throes and expiring palpitations in the living sepulchre.

They build their policy upon organized falsehood. It is a part of their heartless tactics to assert that the secession feeling is still strong among the Southern people, that the rebellion is not dead, but is ready to flare again from its very ashes. Until most of the bitter death of the rebellion, they pay it effer, the lately rebellious State can be allowed with safety to live.

The gross hypocrisy and fallacy of this argument is almost too obvious for exposure. So cession means to go out of the Union, and the States in rebellion simply tried without success to put themselves out of the Union, and to stay out. But the people now charged with secession feeling, and the States which the Radicals propose to destroy, are striving to be within the Union in opposition to the efforts of their Radical accusers.

The Southern people are denounced as yet in feeling secessionists, by men who would refuse them the opportunity of being in practice Unionists. The same men denied the right of certain States to go out of the Union, and will not now consent to have those States in the Union. In effect the present policy of the Radicals is as wicked as their logic is weak. They are disloyal in trying to defeat Southern loyalty. They assail the integrity of the Union in their efforts to abridge integrant States

We have again to record our thanks to Adams' Express for files of the latest papers from Mobile and Montgomery, Ala., and from Augusta, Ga. In former days the Express served to correct the delays of the mail; at present it is almost an entire substitute for the mail, and its facility and efficiency in this way go far to sustain those who favor the abolition of the postal system and giving the transmission of letter and newspaper conveyance to private enterprise.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machines.—The agency for the celebrated Sewing Machines of Grover & Baker is established at 120 Canal street (Touap Buildings). We call attention to the advertisement published in another column.

Lothrop's Gratis.—Some people, of a commercial turn of mind, imagine everything must be paid for, and many are inclined to doubt even that the old Capitol Prison, and some other national institutions, are places where lodgings may be had free of charge!

We observe, by the latest news from Mexico, that Dr. Gwin has not been Duked, as so frequently asserted, but there seems no doubt from the way Maximilian has snubbed him, that he has been Imperially duped. It is supposed that this gentleman, usually so shrewd and deeper, has advanced as further in his project to escape for gold in Sonora than to get into the escape of the Mexican capital.

The steamship Evening Star, L. C. Winpenny, commanding, sailed at 7 o'clock last evening for New York direct with a full cargo of cotton and sundry merchandize, also the following passengers:

W H Litchfield and family, Ed C Lowrance, C H Hamlin, F E Burke, Mrs Harriet Jones and child, Miss Jones, Miss Mary E Ashford and child, Miss McDonald, Emile Lafon, Miss Kohlke and child, M Schwartz and child, Mrs Mary Ann Wilson and child, Miss Mary Wilson, Miss Sarah Wilson, Miss Mary Ann Wilson, Miss Emma Wilson, Miss Sarah Ann Wilson, Miss Mary
