A few days ago we did ample justice to Georeal Green's Principles of that of Geo. Boorr, though as signal as that perpetrated at Camarga, will probably prove far more disastrous to his retraction of the attended at the material portions of his extraordinary interests the people of Tennessee, in which while taking occasion to plume hisself upon his far sighted diplomacy, and unconquerable valor, during the Mexican campaign, he impugned the observable statement of that of Geo. These revelations of what General Pittow siyled the secret history of that campaign were of such a nature as to render a reply inevitable antagonist; neither does he occupy so exalted a position before the public as to impart peculiar and exceeding to ingratiate himself with the Legislature of Tennessee, he thought proper to enhance his brilliant civil and military reputation at the expense of one who is to him as Hyrshiox to a satyr, he cannot in justice complain if the poisoned chalice be commended to his own lips, and he be forced to awallow even to the dregs, the nanascous and deadly draught. The first in the band of volunteers, who has come forward for the purpose of inflicting condign and merited chartisement on the hero of Camargo, is E. A. Hyroscotx, Acting Inspector-General of the American army in Mexico, and late Brevet Brigadier-General; and we must confess that an excertaining flagellation was never bectowed with more hearty good-will and gusto than the one administered to the unfortunate Pittow. General Hyroscotx observes, is lisses, that Pittow's remarkable production stands alone "as an instance wherein a candidate for office before our people bases he claims, or his principal claim, upon an open confession of having occupied the low and dishonorable position of a spy ipon the conduct of his command in General;" and we must confess that an excertaining flagellation was never becoved with more hearty good-will and gusto than the one administered to the unfortunate Pittow.
