That some of the higher officers, in the administration, may be entrusted to others than the present incumbents, is nowise improbable. But the divergent accounts, which we have, would go entirely to alter the physiognomy of the cabinet, and justify the supposition of a thorough change; though we believe that, such cannot be the present intention of the president.

On one thing, however, the different surmises evidently agree; they all concur in pointing out Mr. McLane as the head of the state department, and sending Mr. Livingston as ministents France, in spite of Mr. Harris' charge. The treasury department is generally assigned to Mr. Woodbs. ry, who has distinguished himself in the newy department, which it is supposed will devolve on governor Forsyth. Opinions, however, vary on this score; Mr. Forsyth is, by some, to assume the secretaryship of the war, and Mr. Dallas it its of the navy department. Mr. Barry either retains his present station, or goes to England or Spain; Mr. speaker Stevenson is spoken of as a missionary to the former power; if oither of the latter destinations devolve on Mr. Barry, "the babbiing breath o'the talkful populace" fills up the gen ral, post officeahip with Mr. Willis, Mr. Dallas, or Col. R. Majohnson—and further we glean not from the many on dits.
