BONES OF ANCIENT GIANT

Amazing Discovery in Oregon is of Interest

The discovery of the bones of a giant bird living in one of the magnificent Oregon caves by Dr. E. H. Harrington, of the New York State Museum, and Dr. D. H. Grinnell, of the University of California, in January, is a scientific event of considerable moment. The bones are those of a species of bird belonging to the family of the Accipitridae, which includes the hawks, eagles, and falcons. The bird is believed to have been about 12 feet long, with a wingspan of 14 feet, and to have weighed about 100 pounds. The discovery is of great interest to scientists and to the public alike. The bones are now at the New York State Museum for study and preservation.
