Hitherto we are not aware that any practical evil has resulted to our navga ision from this experiment of the British government. It may be obvious, how ver, to auvone conversant with cotton trade, that if it be established that British ships can load at our ports with this staple, and by merely touching, without unlading, at Bermude the Batamas, or any other convenient colonial port, can import their cargoes into England, at a duty consideraby less than would be paid on the same cargo in American ships—the stinulated equality of the treaty as to ships and their cargoes, is a nullity.
