A SUFFERING DENTIST.

When your teeth are aching, and you feel as though you must "pull out" the offending tooth, you may feel inclined to neglect the matter altogether; but this, of course, is not the case. If you do not consult a dentist, he will not only neglect the matter, but he will also become worse. You may be surprised to learn that there is no remedy for toothache, except to go to a dentist. It is important to know that toothache is a symptom of something wrong with the teeth, and that the only cure is to go to a dentist.

A RECENT CASE.

A man came to me the other day, complaining of toothache. He had been suffering for several weeks, and had tried all sorts of remedies, but to no avail. I examined his teeth, and found that he had a cavity in one of them. I removed the decayed part, and filled the cavity with gold. The patient was relieved immediately, and has been well ever since.

TOOTHACHE REMEDIES.

There are several toothache remedies that are said to be effective. One of the most popular is a solution of borax and water, which is applied to the affected tooth. Another is a mixture of baking powder and salt, which is applied to the tooth and then rinsed out. These remedies are generally effective, but it is always better to consult a dentist.

THE DENTIST.

The dentist is a person who is specially trained to treat toothache. He has a knowledge of the anatomy of the teeth, and knows how to remove decayed parts and fill cavities. He also knows how to treat gum diseases, and how to treat the root canal, which is the part of the tooth that is below the gum line. The dentist is a person who should be consulted in case of toothache.

A SUDDEN ACHING.

A sudden aching of the teeth is a symptom of something wrong with the teeth. It is important to know that toothache is a symptom of something wrong with the teeth, and that the only cure is to go to a dentist. You may be surprised to learn that toothache is a symptom of something wrong with the teeth, and that the only cure is to go to a dentist.

THE DENTAL CAREER.

The dental career is a fascinating one. The dentist is a person who is specially trained to treat toothache. He has a knowledge of the anatomy of the teeth, and knows how to remove decayed parts and fill cavities. He also knows how to treat gum diseases, and how to treat the root canal, which is the part of the tooth that is below the gum line. The dentist is a person who should be consulted in case of toothache.

THE DENTAL SCHOOL.

The dental school is a place where dentists are trained. It is a place where they learn about the anatomy of the teeth, and how to remove decayed parts and fill cavities. They also learn how to treat gum diseases, and how to treat the root canal, which is the part of the tooth that is below the gum line. The dental school is a place where dentists learn their craft, and where they can learn how to treat toothache.