Every exertion on his part shall be made to merit the approbation of those who may intrust children to his care, and of those people who take private lessons from him. His method of teaching the above language is grounded both upon reason and experience; it is simple, perspicuous and impressive, and enables the learner in a short time to speak and write the said languages with ease and propriety. This method has proved a valuable acquisition for pupils, even not acquainted with the grammatical principles of any language, and only gifted with a certain knowledge of their own language. A foreign language without burthening their memory, and taking more time for their studies than that required for their usual lessons under the preceptor. The course of each language is divided into three sections of thirty lessons each. At the end of the first section, the scholar will have learned the rules of pronunciation, orthography and the general principles of grammar, so as to read his studies, if he please, without the further assistance of a master. At the end of the second section, he will have acquired syntax, with all the exceptions to the general rules of the declension parts of speech, understand well all that he reads, and be able to translate the language he studies into his own. At the end of the third section, he will have studied correct phresology, will write and speak well, and even understand those who speak with much rapidity, and translate elegantly his own language into the one he studies. The scholar being at liberty to quit his class whenever he deems it proper.
