HEPUBLICAN TICKET.

ANDREW JACKSON,

'It is fortunate for the country that Gen. Jackson is likely to be fit for public life at the end of the present four years; for in him is the only hope left of avoiding the dangers manifestly about to rise out of the broad chastraction now again given to the constitution of the United States which effices all limitations of powers, and leaves the general government, by theory, altogether unrestrained."—THOS. JEF-FERSON, in 1836.

The interest upon banking capital is not less than seven per cent, and the banks of our country draw from the people fourteen millions of dollars, when all the specie in all their vaults, amounts to only twenty millions. Thus yielding seventy per cent, upon their specie, or, involter words, upon their true capital.—
This is a fact that cannot be run away from, and is shows at a glance the magnitude of banking privileges.
This inconsiderable proportion of specie, berves, with skillful nursing, to lack up a circulation in bank notes, of about seventy millions. > From the Philadelphia American Sentinel. DEMOCRATIC JACKSON MEETING.

Monday, July 23, 1832.

In pursuance of the public call, a meeting of unexampled size, composed of the democrats of the city and county of Philadelphia, who will support the president of the people in the firm and virtuous exercise of his constitutional powers, and who are friendly to the re-election of ANDREW JACKSON, BANK OR NO son, James M. Linnard, Jonathan T. Knight and Frederick Steever, were elected vice presidents; Antony Laussat, George N. Baker, Col. T. W. L. Freeman and John L. Frederick, were appointed secretaries.

The chairman explained to the meeting the principles upon which he had been induced to vote for the re-chartering of the bank of the United States. All representatives were bound by the declared will of their right to capture American vessels for sealing on the to which he had access, the vote of the legislature, the Islands, nor foolishly threatening to "blow their" town submit papers and private letters, all seemed to designate their ears," as I fear others of less experience mate the back as Pennsylvania's favorite. Whereas, Andrew Jackson, the hero of New Or leans and the man of the people's choice, in the exer-rise of his high prerogatives as president of these United States, has deemed it necessary to put his veto upon the bill re-chartering the bank of the United Sintes-and whereas this act has elicited on the pa. of our political opponents proceedings of the most inlast week. Cotton has been decidedly of dull sale, at a tribing reduction of price. In sugar there is no reduction of price. In sugar there is no reduction of price, but rather less anxiety to buy. Of indigo the supply appears to exceed the demand; and as these it will be read throughout the land; it will be comcountry and the perpetuity of our republican institu tions-therefore be it resolved.

That reposing, as we do, unlimited confidence in the purity and patriotism of Andrew Jackson, we can only perceive in his late message additional evidence of that speciations of the stockholders. MRS. MUSTERS.—The 'Mary' of Lord syron's sarl passion, who will one day become as in associated with the annals of poetry, as those of Laura ie Sades or the Lady Dorothy Sidney, of Leonora Esteor the Counters d'Albani, is thus apostsofaized n 'Don Juan.'

I have a passion for the name of Mary. For once it had a magic sound to me And still it half calls up the realms of facry, Where I beheld what never was to be: And feelings changed, but this was last to vary-A spell from which e'en yet I am not free.' The early development of passions, which the present system of education calls forth, is elucidated forcibly by the following anecdotes.

A Lilliputian in long clothes, throwing herself languishingly upon a sofa, on her return from church, cried lately to her mother, "I really must decline going to church in future, at least we must have our places changed." —"Why so, my dear?" asked her astonished parent. "Because there is a person in an adjuning pew who stares at me like a pest, and I do assure you, mamma, I never gave him the slightest accourage ment." The eldest daughter of a gentleman in tussell square aged six, received a card which ran thus: "Miss Bt home at 7, punch at 8, quadrilles." THE PEOPLE.

THE PEOPLE.

The people, the people, nought turneth aside,
Their will in full force, their revenge in full tide;
The proudest of earth in the balance are found,
Like dust which the hurricane scatters around. The people, the people, can huri in an hour, The king from his throne, or the ruler from pow'r; The good and the evil is theirs,—they can be, The basest of slaves, or the first of the free. The people, the people, if glorious and brave, Will never submit to the bonds of the slave; A moment of daring, a minute of toil, And their's is the triumph, and their's is the spoil. The people, the people, are not, as of old, To be soothed by the timid, or aw'd by the bold; The dark reign of terror hath pass'd from the earth, And liberty only with courage has birth. The people, the people, must conquer or die, He honor'd below, or sainted on high, With those hallowed martyrs of freedom whose fame Is immortal, and bright as the Heav'n they claim. The people, the people, remember their might, When it trampled in France on the banners of white, When the flag of Nassau 'neath it's vengeance was furl'd When it lost to the Spaniard his western world. The people, the people, remember them too, When America vanquish'd the red and the blue: And rose with her stars full of freedom and light, A firmament blazing thro' slavery's night. The people, the people, their tot must be drawn, And freedom be gain'd or crush'd in its dawn;

The blow must be struck, must be speedy and sure, The foca of the people alone cry endure. J. Y. P.
