The Mercantile, it would soon, liked the Bee well enough, while it kept tolerably quiet, and only scourged some of the more flagrant tergiversations of its ever-changing contemporary; but now that the little porker gets jammed in the fence every morning, where it were mere c uelty to stop him from squesting, the Bee is not as "genas it used to be, forsooth, when Mr. Alex. In the prospect of such a war there is much for regret, but more for rejorcing. We do not believe in the perfect shifty of a people or government; but we do believe that the influence of government upon the happiness of our manifestation on the Labard. In the first piece, as relates to the former, we do not see what right the contractors have, consistent with usual practice, id engage for the load at one price and sell it at an other, or, in other words, at charge their friends 7 per cantfor being put upon their list as sharers in the contract.

In the second place, it was be evident that the reputations of the house in question, and its known connexion with America, must have been the sole guarantee to the public for the ultimate security of a very unpromising bargain. If we are rightly informed, the previous debt of Louislain amounted to about 7,000,000 of dollars; add, the 7,000,000 created by this contract, and the whole will amount to 14,000,000, or about 2,800,000? By coming under such onerous obligations, the state of Louisians will be more blavily taxed than any member of the American Union for the mere payment of dividends, without raising one cent for the expenses of internal government. The whole population of the state does not exceed 215,000 persons, of whom 109,000 are blacks. Omitting the latter from the assemble of Louisians will 129 halek Louisiada cotton at 62 a 1 ting the latter from the account, the debt of Louisiana will amount to 261. a-head on every many and child, in the republic. This is an amount of mostgage on the industry of the Louisianian people only exceeded in proportion by the debt of Great Buttain itself; and not equalled by that of any debt of Great Bettain itself, and not equalled by that of any other nation with which we are acquainted.

In the third place, though it would not matter much to a private debter who has to pay interest for a loan to what party he paid it; whether fereign or domestic, yet the difference is extremely important in this case, whether the creditor be foreign or domestic, as the necessity of resorting to a foreign loan-market, and paying interest to foreigners, shows the absolute impossibility of raising money at home, and therefore the difficulty with which remittances must be procured to fulfil engagements in London, where the shares procured to fulfil engagements in London, where the shares are all issued, and where only provision is to be made for their ultimate liquidation.

It is not for us to step in between people and their own imprudence; but we must express our surprize and regret that we should be obliged again to advert any further to the waste or the risk of British capital invested in trans-Atlantic loans, where there is not even an independent government to offer its security.
