lic esteem; it is a powerful autiliary: our handshall never be solled with the alart of partizans. As an cornest of the patronage, with which we have been porters, nothing save zeal, good faith, and imparported, we did blame, because we conceived that the censure was founded in equity. We established our choice between him and snother candidate equally known to us; but how could we now decome, between him and competitors, who are not yet in evidence? Heaven ward us against the fidicule of such pretensions.

To dwell longer on the calumnious assertions, which have wrung this explanation from us, would be betraying a weekness on our part. For those who have, since the origin of our paper, indessantly honored us with their esteem, and countenanced with their patronage, this statement was, perchance, superfluous: but we held it a duty to ourselves to dispel every suspicion that might seemingly rest on our inte-

some other immediate cause, that called it forth .-But we have gathered from the different reports, that the infection declared itself, while the vesse was in the river; now is it not absurd to suppose that a discuse, so rapid, so fatal in its effects, was not made patent before nearly 60 days of the passage had slapsed, and, that in such a case, it should have affected only one individual?
