Indian Treaties .- We learn from the Mississippi Advocate, (Vicksburg) that letters have been received at that place, from Messrs. Poin-

It thus appears that two of the favorite projects of President Jackson have met with the disapprobation of the National Legislature; the one which relates to the renewal of the Charter they came here in. of the Bank of the United States, and that in Lemuel Foster, jr. respect to the removal of the Indians, and if we Jeremieh Cole, are to judge from the extracts which we have given in another part of our paper from his Message, that he desired a repeal of the duty on Sugar, he has been foiled in three of his propositions. We regret the rejection of the Treaties, Adams Gray, because we think as affairs stand, it would be better for the Indians to remove, at least we think | Cyril Martin, they will gain nothing by remaining on their own J. Our consistent neighbor says: "It is suspected that Mr. Clay will try to run into the Schate. No movements from that quarter would surprise

What person not blinded by his bigotay, not drunk with party spirit, can read the coute aptnous notice of such a man as Henry Clay, by such a man, without butting and disgret. He from that quarter! Were the whole sentence predicated of a felon, suspected of being about to perpetrate a larceny, it could not have run in more resulting phrases. And it is predicated of whom? Of Henry Clay-the most highly endowed public man, not of this country only, but of the age-the American citizens, whose renown after that of the Washingtons, Prinklins, Jef. fersons and Henrys, has travelled furtherest and widest--he who his countrymen in foreign lands are proudest to point to as sustaining the Revolutionary reputation of their country! This is the man spoken of as a barglar, suspected of the intention of house breaking. And by whom! A man who for a long period of twenty-five years, has never expressed an opinion distasteful to a majority, or supported a measure at war with his own interests-and who with inflexible flexibility, accommodates his sails to the winds, and turns summersetts by rule. He presume to measure the giant proportions of Henry Clay. and to say be shall be surprised at no movement homey make! Pur Clay is fallen, sunk, darmed forever! the magnanimity of the Enquirer.

One is at a loss to know, imperfectly examining the case, why it is, that Henry Clay, the most liberal of men, the truest to his friend hips, the most magnanimous in his enunties, possessing the most philanthropic spirit, with every quality to win respect, and command admiration -that he of all other men, should be pursued with an implacable and acrimonious malignity, unprecedented in the history of this country Yet so it is. If he is irrevocably fallen as his enemies say, why should the artillery of 300 Presses incessantly play upon him! What sense or necessity is there in shooting dead ducks? There is but one way to read the riddle. The gentlemen cannot think him "fallen" after all, No-they must in truth, not only think him alive, but formidable. And we fully agree with their secret opinions.

The re-election of Mr. Johnston to the Schate of the United States is highly satisfactory to vindication of their rights, and evry policy that is purely American and Republican, Like HEN-CLAY, he is one of the greatest champion's and firmest supporters of the American. From the New York Journal of Commerce. VALLEY OF THE MISSISSIPPI.-The Quarterly Journal of the American Education Society contains a map of the United States, in which the Atlantic Slope, the Valley of the Mississippi, and the Pacific Slope, are distinguished by different colorings. The comparalive extent of these three great sections of our country is also represented by parallel linesthus:

-.... Atlantic slope. ----Pacificslope We who have traversed the Atlantic States, can form, from this appeal to the eye, some idea of the vastaess of the region beyond the Allethanes, and particularly of the valley of the Mississippi. When we look forward a few censuspects that Heary Clay wid try to run into the turies, and see this whole amplitude filled with Senate, and he shall be surprise! at no movement in man beings like ourselves, there arise many momentous questions which the future alone can solve. Will this mighty population belong to our own nation, or to nations distinct from our own? Will they be communities of free men, or will they bow to a monarch's sceptre! Will they its intelligent and moral! Will religion shed be purifying influence upon them? or will they be legased by ignorance, superstition and crime!

ing these questions than many are aware. What it, that has given to this nation a character afferent from that of our sister Republics in the South! different from most of the nations of the Old World? and made it a sort of beacon for the diffusion of moral and intellectual light wherever its influence extends? It is the example, the counsels and institutions of our fathers. And it will be our example, counsels and instituins, which will give a character to the mislions who are to people the great valley of the West. If as communities spring up in that wide ampitheatre, we send the blessings of the Gospel, in I aid them in the establishment of literary and religious rastitutions; if we show them by our oncluct, that we are what we would wish them to be, or at least, that we sincerely prize the ble-sings which we would impart to ad mankind, And is this the cause of the vile and untiring a- we shall have done much to fulfil the obligations buse which is poured upon hin? But if we suffer ourselves every fice lifts up his leg against him! Is this to decline from the high example which has een set before us; if we adopt the corrupt maxms and habits of more degenerate nations, and of course their vices, we may expect to see this fair Republic sandered into parts, its liberties destroyed, and the brilliant prospects which now open in the distance turned into impenetrable Daniel O' Connel .-- We are indebted to a comacceptal friend for Dublin papers to Oct 25th inclusive, received via Havre. That of the latest date contains an "honorable" correspondence between Sir Henry Hardinge and Daniel O'Connel, growing out of certain expressions used by the latter in a speech which was published in the reeman's Journal of Oct. 23rd. Mr. O'Coanel's kaiguage, as reported, was in these words: "In the beginning of this week, you saw an English soldier, a hireling scribe at the Castle, writing down the freedom of our country. On the day the above was published, Sir Henry sent his friend, Col. D'Aguiler, to demand of Mr. O'Counel a disavowal of certain expressions used, or in neglect thereof, that he would give him the satisfaction "which one gentleman has a right to expect from another": i. e. to have his brains blown out. Mr. O'Connel replied as follows:

"Mr. O'Connel does not feel himself called on either to avow or dissavow any thing attribu. ted to him by the public Papers. At the same time, that if any allegation of fact be pointed out to him—attributed to him—which is not true he will readily either disayow the assertion if untrupublic, in the beautiful and feeling letter of Mrs.
