

Stan Zeigler (born October 21, 1968), is an American artist who at a very early age began telling stories without needing words through images created from his mental visions. Never being formally trained, this self-taught artist was influenced by late Renaissance and Norman Rockwell paintings. The tailoring to detail and photographic likenesses in these works were the intriguing influences that are now the basis for his artistic form. A backdrop of hard work and dedication to honing this skill, Stan's impeccable ability to create life-like images has brought him notoriety as an up-and-coming artist on the move. He has done pieces for "A" listed celebrities like Vivica A. Fox, and the comedian Joe Clair to name a few.

Stan was awarded a full scholarship to Norfolk State University for track and field, where he excelled to athletic excellence. His illustrious achievements would include being an honor student and Cum Laude graduate from the university in 1990. His business interests have allowed him to expand his reach through a clothing line as CEO of the Zeigler Design Group and a partnership with SILIS Greeting Cards as its sole resident artist.
