Chiajna Monastery
From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia Coordinates: 44°28′45″N 25°59′53″E

Chiajna Monastery is the name of a ruined church situated on the outskirts of Bucharest, which is the subject of many mysterious legends, including the story that it is cursed. The information center Giulești Park is devoted to the upkeep and protection of the building, which is a national heritage site.

History [edit]

Construction began during the reign of Alexander Ypsilanti (1774-1782) and was completed by the Phanariote Nicholas Mavrogenes (1786-1790). It was built in neoclassical style, and was considered very large for that time: 43 meters long and 18 high, with walls 1 and 2 meters thick.^[1]

The church was meant to be one of the most important places of worship for Romania, but that never happened. Legend says that the church was bombarded by the Turks even before consecration. The Turks believed that the church formed a new threat as the start of a new city, and therefore tried to destroy it. Thus, all the documents within the church were burned, though the building itself remained standing. The tower collapsed in the earthquake of 1977.

The monastery was abandoned during the plague in the reign of Alexander Ypsilanti. Other sources say that work on the monastery began in 1792, but was abandoned during the time of plague, when the prince was Michael Șuțu.

Legends [edit]

- Its great bell was cast into the Dâmbovița River waters and, according to locals, is heard pounding on full moon nights.
- On the wall on the right from the entrance, in about the middle, a few feet high, detaching plaster formed in the

Cultura romana pe Internet si licentele deschise

Astazi am trimis, impreuna cu alte asociatii si persoane interesate de subiect, o scrisoare deschisa catre Ministerul Culturii și Patrimoniului National pe tema patrimoniului cultural romanesc aflat pe Internet si care poate fi afisat la Europeana.eu. Pina acum sunt vreo 36 000 de opere romanesti incarcate acolo, insa tinta stabilita de UE pentru Roamnia este de 789 000 pina in 2011. Pare mult, insa daca ne uitam doar la recentul concurs WikiLovesMonuments gasim aproape 6000 de imagini sub o licenta libera (deci care permit reutilizarea lor si incarcarea in Europeana.eu) ale patrimoniului cultural imobil romanesc. <!--break--> Aceasta situatie ne determina sa intrebam ce o sa faca Ministerul Culturii pentru a profita de aceste opere sub licenta libera, ca si alte cinci intrebari conexe:

1. Ce actiuni are in vedere Ministerul Culturii și Patrimoniului National in scopul implementării recomandărilor Comisiei Europene referitoare la continutul digital, în general, și atingerii obiectivului indicativ de 789.000 de elemente cu care România ar trebui să contribuie la alimentarea Europeana in următorii patru ani, în particular?
2. Ce atribuții/responsabilități are Ministerul Culturii și Patrimoniului National în raport cu Europeana și cu participarea României la alimentarea bibliotecii Europeana și care este entitatea/persoana din cadrul Ministerului care îndeplinește aceste atribuții?
3. Care sunt celelalte Ministerse sau entități publice și/sau private cu care Ministerul Culturii și Patrimoniului National colaborează în sensul îndeplinirii recomandărilor pentru contribuția României la Europeana?
4. În ce măsură Ministerul Culturii și Patrimoniului National întreprinde acțiuni pentru a încuraja și/sau a permite persoane(lor) fizice sau juridice deținătoare de drepturi de autor pentru materialele culturale digitalizate, să

No todo son rosas:

- Problemas de los participantes con la comprensión de las licencias (comunmente en flickr);
- Problemas con los códigos de los monumentos;
- Algunos monumentos históricos todavía se encuentran protegidos por copyright (y no pueden ser usados en Wikipedia);
- Muchos se van por el camino fácil (monumentos más conocidos);
- Problemas con la subida manual de fotografías a Commons;
- Problemas migrando la información desde otros servicios (flickr);
- Estadísticas difíciles de extraer (se necesita programación API);
- Dificultad para ordenar enormes cantidades de información (para el jurado)
