The stores begin to look busy; the issue ceases to wear an appearance of desertion; goods are beginning to arrive, and the rattle of the dray is a cheerful harbinger of tetter times. The birds of passage have not, it is true, winged their homeward fight, but by the end of the month many of them, and especially the acotimated, will return with a view of superintending their affairs and preparing for winter operations. There is no doubt that had our city escaped the epidemic this year, the renewal of buspess would have taken places earlier than owned. Even as it is, we think New Orleans will not be materially thrown back by the fewer. With respect to the extent of business we are hardly yet qualified to express an opinion. The panic of last October assertiously impaired public confidence, and though it passed away without inflicting extensive or treparable injury, there existed throughout the winter a perceptible diminution in current affairs. Credit was for a winter completely overthrown; the mercantic community preferred curtailing their operations rather than incur the risk of a wentual bes. That the effects of the revules to have not yet disappeared is evident from the immense accumulations of depoints in our banks. Buspess men are not apt to lear their capital ids, and do so only when
