NEW ORLEANS:

THURSDAY MORNING, OCT. 15, 1863.

Sales at Auction To-day.

By D. E. Murphy, at 10 o'clock, on the Levee, head of Toulouse street, apples. At 10 o'clock, at No. 67 Magazine street, dry goods, boots, shoes, hats, and groceries. By the Sheriff, at 10 o'clock. At 11 o'clock, on the levee, head of Conti-Bienville street, hay.

By McCarren & Landry, at 11 o'clock, at their mart furniture.

By W. P. Vincent, at salesroom No. 64 Custom-house street, Italian silks, Irish linens, ribbons, etc.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—There are many scarces and resources that such times as the present may dry up; all but two, indeed, may be exhausted entirely or sealed hermetically. These are the blessed fountain of laughter, which no gloom, or danger, or calamity can utterly dam or the relief and refreshment of weary and world-sick humanity. There is a time to weep, and a time to laugh, saith the Preacher. It is needless to say when is the time to weep; any person in search of an occasion for weeping could hardly go amiss for one, unless he should happen to step into the Academy of Music while Sanford's troupe were throwing the house into hysterics of cachinnation by one of their funny scenes. He would soon realize, if he were not a walking contradiction to human nature as represented by the audience, that then and there were eminently the time and the place to laugh with a "perfect looseness."

The sale of 83 bales or more of cotton by E. T. Montgomery, this day, October 15th, at one o'clock, at salesroom 93 Camp street, has many indecements for purchasers, as the entire lot is in original bales, and a large portion has just been ginned and put in new bagging and rope, and some of the present season is of superior quality to the above lots.

D. E Morphy, auctioneer, calls the attention of buyers to the various sales advertised by him for this day, at different hours, at his store. A great variety of goods will be sold on account of the parties leaving this city.

McCarren & Landry sell at auction, at 11 o'clock to day, in their mart, a large assortment of furniture. See advertisement.

Remember that on Friday the 16th instant, at 10½ o'clock, A M, Messrs. McCarren & Landry will sell the best assortment of furniture in the cottage house, No. 18 Liberty street, near Canal street.

News from Bayou Lafourche.

The Thibodaux Sentinel of the 10th instant contains the following items:

FIRE.

On last Wednesday night a fire destroyed the sugar-house of M. Leufroi Barras, in Terre bonne. We have not learned the details; nor are we able to say if the planter who had already commenced grinding, will lose more than three-quarters of his crop for want of means to work it up.

THEFT.

We have not as many complaints made to us of thefts committed in the shades of night From time to time, however, reports reach us of locks broken, of doors forced, and stores robbed. Day before yesterday, again, the same thing happened; but it is quite rare now, and it is not necessary to complain too much.

ORIZOBA.

A number of citizens have commenced grinding, and in a fortnight nearly all in a condition to grind, will be actively engaged in it. The misfortune is that hands are scarce, and those employed are not intelligent. On account of the emancipation ideas prevalent among them. The yield of cane is satisfactory; the weather could not be more favorable; but, consequences do not mark a large result. We are not below the fact when we say that the crop will not be one-tenth of that of an ordinary year.

DUCK-HUNTING.

Duck-hunting on the lower Bayou would be very productive, for the game is abundant and the hunters numerous, but for an unfortunate lack of ammunition! The competent authorities ought to consider the subject. Common justice at this time is the livelihood of a great number of families; and no risk would be run by furnishing hunters the powder and shot necessary, and thus relieving a number of poor families.

The Arming of the Slaves by the Southern Leaders.

The special Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times devotes a recent letter to the project of liberating and arming the slaves, about to be adopted, he asserts, by the Southern leaders He says:

I have the authority for saying that the Southern leaders have decided to take a step which they have long had in contemplation. They have resolved to liberate and make soldiers of 300,000 of their slaves, and to compel raise them at the point of their armies. The reasons for the step are said to be: 1st, to get over the difficulties which arise from the employment of black soldiers in the North; 2d, to meet the call for a speedy draft for 300, 31, to give England and France one more incentive for intervention in favor of the South. 4th, to convince the world of the real motive for which they are fighting, by giving up their most cherished institution.

A few months it my information is correct, will see 300,000 of these slaves led and commanded by the masters whom they have served and loved all their lives, fighting side by side with 300,000, perhaps 500,000, white soldiers. Nothing will be easier than to enlist the feelings of the slaves in the cause in which they will fight. Love of country is as strong in the breast of the Southern negro as it is in the breast of any man. He loves the sunny land in which he was born and raised, and which was made productive by his labor. He has an interest in it. He takes a pride in it.

They will feel and believe that they are fighting for their country and their homes, and it will be so, for the plan of the Southern leaders contemplates no such foolish scheme as deportation. The slaves are to be liberated. But they are not to be driven from their homes. The Southern leaders know that their great staples can only be raised by negro labor, and they will devise some means to compensate their liberated slaves for that labor, when the war is over. In the meantime the labor of the slaves will not be needed on the plantations while the war lasts. There is nothing on the plantations for them to do. The South produces corn, beef, and pork almost spontaneously. The raising and preparing wheat for food, and the curing of pork and beef, can easily be effected by the female negroes, the boys and old men.

There will be an idea that it would be dangerous to do this, and that the slaves are not to be trusted because they hate their masters. That idea is delusive. If the slaves wished to revolt, they have had an opportunity for more than two years. Unless I am entirely deceived, therefore the North has got to contemplate the question of fighting the South with 600,000 or 700,000 more troops in the field at the end of the year than have heretofore entered into their calculation.

The Late Wholesale Executions at Mirkdale.

At noon on Saturday, says the Liverpool Mercury of the 14th September, José Maria Alvarez, the Spanish seaman convicted of the murder of James Harrison, in Oldhall street; John Hughes, convicted of the murder of his wife, in Great Homer street; James O'Brien, condemned for the murder of Elizabeth Callaghan, in Spitalfields; and Benjamin Thomas, the Welsh sailor, sentenced to death for the murder of Mary Rowlands, in Great Homer street, Oldhall street, were executed on the scaffold erected at the western angle of Kirkdale Gaol.

Commenting on this unusual scene, the London Times remarks:

On Saturday last a spectacle was exhibited at Liverpool which has happily few parallels in our own experience. At the hour of noon struck four malefactors were brought out together and hanged side by side on one gallows. There was a time when such wholesale executions were not uncommon. In the metropolis, to say nothing of provincial towns, more than half a dozen or a dozen criminals suspended together in front of Newgate on a Monday morning. The exercise of the law in those days was small, but as the sentence pronounced with death were numerous, and as twenty-four hours only were then allowed to elapse between the sentence and its execution, capital punishment usually taken on a Saturday, so that the convicted offenders had the benefit of the Sunday in a day's more life. This piece of consideration threw the last work of the week into Monday, and very many persons can remember the results in such spectacles as we have described. But in those days, when the punishment of death has been confined to a few, and is not always inflicted even on that provocation, the unusual sight exhibited at Liverpool may be expected to produce more than the common effect. It was, indeed, an awful scene, and one to excite the intense commotion. The preparations were commenced on the Friday morning, and the scaffold was not completed at one time to our International Exhibitions. It seems, too, that the railway authorities regarded the occasion as suggestive of the need "organization" for the accommodation of the public; at least, we are distinctly told that "excursion"—they might have been called "excursion"—trains on the special night passengers were brought in the festal morning. Then the law's dense was enforced, and the work was over.

If we look, however, a little more attentively to the incidents of this terrible scene, we shall find that its extraordinary character was due simply to the fact that four executions took place together. No one of the four cases taken by itself would have aroused much remark.

Yet, for all this, we shall probably see the question of capital punishment one of public discussion revived for a time by this unusual spectacle, and, just as we read when the last woman was burnt or the last man pilloried, it is possible that some future chronicler of our morals may relate as a remarkable event the hanging together in a provincial town as late as the year 1863. But there would be no real resemblance between the case we have described and those already shown, for one would indicate the extension of a barbarous practice, while the other would but mark the period of an extraordinary coincidence.

That the Times was correct in its prediction would already appear from the publication, immediately after the hanging, in the Liverpool Mercury, of a vented denunciation of a capital punishment, which the writer, Robert Creasy, on calls the "British Upas Tree." The ex-
