

LA ABEJA.

NUÉVA-ORLEANS, 22 DE JUNIO 1830.

Méjico, 28 de mayo.

Con el mayor sentimiento tenemos que anunciar la ruina de la ciudad de Guatemala y de los pueblos de sus contornos. Cinco días consecutivos de temblores de tierra horribles, que continuaban todavía a la salida del correo, han desplomado y traido al suelo los principales edificios, obligando a los desgraciados habitantes a huir a las plazas y a los campos, donde para cubrirse de las inclemencias han hecho chozas de petas. Los templos que el furor revolucionario había despojado antes de sus alhajas y privado de sus ministros espumos y perseguidos, quedan inutilizados, en especial el hermoso de S. Francisco, que por su mayor amplitud y solidez ha padecido lo mas: el pueblo de Amatitlán, lugr de refugio de las inmediaciones, ha sido enteramente destruido. Es difícil encontrar en la historia de las desgracias de los pueblos, una serie de infiernos comparable a los de la desgraciada Guatemala: la guerra civil, la persecución, que ha sido su efecto, y por ésta la expulsión de todos los hombres respetables que por sus luces e influjo podrían hacer la felicidad de su país; la anarquía, y por último una catástrofe de la naturaleza, que si en otras épocas se ha experimentado ya allí mismo, obligando a varar de situ a la población, ahora se hace más sensible por las circunstancias que la acompañan, y la imposibilidad de reparar los daños, estando escausadas las fortunas públicas y particulares. Registro Oficial.

—Ha salido ayer para Veracruz la conducta con 800 mil pesos, escortada hasta Puebla por el séptimo regimiento de caballería al mando del Sr. Morales. Por la providencia tomada por el gobierno de que los comerciantes se valiesen del conductor que les acomodase, y no fuese uno precisamente el que llevase los caudales, habrá ido el flete a 1 por 100. Si esta remisión es una muestra de haberse reanimado la confianza pública, también es una prueba de que es preciso indispensable proteger y fomentar la industria nacional, para evitar la saña al extranjero de tan gruesas partidas de numerario. Ibid.

Próximo va a salir de la capilla para el sepulcro el sub-teniente D. Mariano Cereceros, acusado de conspirador, y cuando desba considerarse en los últimos instantes de su vida, la humanidad y beneficencia del Esmo. Sr. presidente, lo substraiga de tan miserable estadio, dándole cura a una sustancia suya en que pellizca se le conmutara la pena a que hubiera sido sentenciado por el consejo de guerra en qué se vio su causa: be aquí un razonamiento brillante de generosidad que hará eterno honor a su autor. La misma mano que iba a ser inmolada al frenético furor de Cereceros, lo salva de la muerte, y le restituye el don apreciable de la vida.

Discordando en opiniones con algunos escritores, remore el suceso con sumo placer, y lo consideramos en perfecta analogía con la razón, con el espíritu del siglo, con las bases de la sociedad, y con el sistema de gobierno establecido. Respetamos como debemos las leyes que asignan la pena de muerte a tales y cuales delitos; pero en nuestro concepto, ni la sociedad tiene para imponerla; ni su imposición suete los efectos que el legislador se propuso. Es muy sabido el origen de la sociedad, y mucho más que al constituirse ninguna dí, por que no podía durar, el terrible poder de que se le privara de su existencia. Desde que se alzaron y se susituyeron los hombres como bestias y se han estinguido los crímenes: q. Ha habido escarmiento. No mucha ocasiones se ha visto que al tiempo de ejercitarse un reo, se le cometido un homicidio. No la atrocidad de la pena, sino su pronta imposición y la rectitud de los magistrados, son las que producen aquel saludable efecto.

Está bien que en los siglos pasados, cuando los hombres apenas conocían sus derechos, y por falta de ilustración vivian encaprichados bajo el poder de un tirano, con título de rey, emperador o señor, se castigase a los ciudadanos tan cruelmente; pero que se haga después que la verdadera filosofía ha esparcido sus luces por todo el universo, cuando ya se puede pensar y decir lo que se piensa, cuando ya sabemos que no nacimos para ser gobernados según las inclinaciones y caprichos de un despota, y cuando disfrutamos del sistema republicano federal, fruto precioso de los adelantos del entendimiento humano, no entres en nuestros cálculos ni combinaciones. Por estas razones creemos que el Esmo. Sr. vice-presidente, ha hecho un bien a la patria, libertando de la muerte a uno de sus hijos que puede serle útil algún día, y a todo el linaje humano conservándole unas de sus partes. (El Censor)

Méjico, 29 de Mayo.

Dos capitanes comanches con varios individuos de sus tribus, sus mujeres, hijos emprendieron viaje con solo el objeto de visitar al Esmo. Sr. vice presidente, felicitarlo por hallarse a la cabeza de la república y ofrecerse para cuanto puedan servir a S. E. que ya los cononía personalmente desde que tuvo la comandancia general de los Estados internos; los recibió con el mayor agrado y los obsequió con frutas según su gusto. Esta nación ha sido en la frontera, una de las que han retardado más los progresos de la población y civilización desde tiempos muy atroces, con sus irrupciones sanguinarias. Pero hoy ha llegado hasta ellos el fruto saludable de nuestra existencia política, y son recibidos obserely a charitable institution; the effects as to the latter idea we have never done prove the contrary, and if its object had been what he says, the means for extending it would certainly have been different. Since that time the Mexicans who are true friends to their country have looked upon the minister of the United States as the promoter of their ruin, and all the evils occasioned by that society in whose cause he was so zealous were attributed to him. A difference ought, it is true, to have been made between the agent and the government, between the private conduct of the individual and the public acts of the minister; but that difference, the result of a metaphysical distinction, could not be made by the greatest number.

Such is the cause of the distrust excited, such the origin of the evil: Mr. Poinsett gives his aid to the establishment of a society, which taking the reins of government, ruin the finances, disorganise the army, destroy public confidence, keeps from offices all those whose sincere patriotism is a guarantee for the state: thence the government who sent Mr. Poinsett, wishes the ruin of the republic. The voice of the most respectable citizens is raised against that minister, who through his intervention and his manœuvres has caused all these evils; and yet he is not recalled; thence the government that sent him approves his conduct and wishes to maintain him. Distrust thus established, extends itself over every thing: if new Anglo-American colonies are established in Texas, if some vagrants form trouble and occasion disquiet in that part of the republic, it is immediately apprehended that the same scenes will be renewed, for the hand of Poinsett and of his government are seen. Any new misfortune that befalls the republic, even the Spanish expedition is attributed to the same cause; for when once prejudiced, we distrust every thing.

It is thus that the indiscreet conduct (not to give it a harsher name) of that minister, has been injurious to both countries, it is thus that the means employed to destroy a foreign influence which never existed, and to substitute in its place that of another nation has had the effect to excite suspicion and distrust against that same nation; which shows that in justice, as well as in politics, the surest means to obtain success, is to follow the right line. Had it not been for these same manœuvres the natural sympathy of the two nations would have obtained new strength, no distrust would have existed, and the two nations would have formed treaties that would have strengthened the mutual bond which nature and their institutions have created to unite them, it would be unjust to attribute to a government the errors of a Representative. It would be unjust to complain that that representative has not been recalled when it was not called in an official manner; but it must be confessed also that the opinion which had been formed on the subject was well grounded; and we apprehend that the same opinion will again be revived by some writings in the journals of the United States, writings which are probably from the same individual who caused all the evil. Nevertheless the true policy and interests of the two countries, require that the injury done by the false policy of a single individual should be remedied. To remove all cause of mutual distrust, government following the frank policy it has adopted ought to hasten the conclusion of a treaty of friendship and commerce, and the ratification of the one relative to our boundaries; it ought to establish more intimate relations with that republic, and thereby prove by facts, that we have no intention to submit to the influence of any nation, but that we are willing to maintain under any circumstances, that independence which we have acquired by so many sacrifices, and to treat all friendly nations on the same footing. The one with whom we shall have more commercial relations, the one who shall encourage most our industry, the one with whom the most intimate connexion will exist between its speculations and the cause of our independence and prosperity, that one will be the most favored. The U. S. have declared through their president Monroe, that they will never consent that any foreign nation should join Spain to attack us; that declaration is a guaranty of their friendship and of the interest they feel in our independence so far as their neutrality towards Spain allows it. The government of the U. S. has given us a proof of its good faith in recalling M. Poinsett, as soon as we asked it officially; it thereby showed great interest for our interior tranquillity: those facts must serve as a basis to correct public opinion which under certain respects, must have felt some alteration in both countries, on account of the causes above enumerated.

It is under this point of view that we have always taken part in all matters of any interest to both countries; and it is done by ten fine maps, prepared under towns in the U. States, and others are descriptive of the costume, manners and habits of the people of different countries. Mountains, rivers and cities are divided into six classes according to size, and are designated on the maps by figures. We think instructors, parents and school-committees, who are in want of geographies for their children or pupils, will do well to examine this work." (Enquirer.)

THE BEE.

PRINTED BY J. BAYON DELAIS. & DUELLS.
NEW-ORLEANS:
TUESDAY (Morning) JUNE 22, 1830.

[Translated for the Bee.]

Mexico, May 21.
If it is the interest of all parts of the former Spanish-American, to extend their relations, to unite their forces, and to combine their efforts against the common enemy, it is not the less important for them to cultivate friendly relations, and to fraternize with the United States of the north, as far as the policy and neutrality of the latter will allow. That republic is called by nature, and by the identity of its cause, to protect our emancipation, and to serve us as a guide in the difficult career of political institutions; and they are the first nation who ought to enjoy the benefits of our commerce. Our adoption of the same form of government has bound their interests with ours; the republican principles which we profess, are a further guarantee for the stability of the constitution of the Anglo-Americans. We have given new strength to the principles of that constitution, we have opened a new field to their enterprises, and we have increased competition in their cities: why have not the United States been the first nation to enter with us, in a treaty of friendship and commerce? why not that relative to our boundaries been concluded? why has the want of those two solemn acts damped the mutual interest which ought to exist between the two nations.

If the neutrality of the United States hindered them to protect and assist us in our contest with Spain, as they were protected by France, Spain & Holland in their revolutionary war against England, they ought after our emancipation to have been the first to enter into friendly relations with us. How can we suppose that they do not join their wishes with ours for the liberty and general prosperity of the new world; how can it be believed that free Northern American do not feel the liveliest interest in the emancipation of these families, who in their contest for American liberty have only followed the example of the United States.

The war of Spain against America cannot fail to interest the Anglo-American; and the government of the United States has constantly used its efforts to put a stop to it by giving instructions to its ministers near foreign courts, to apply for the mediation of these courts to induce Spain to acknowledge our independence. A just and enlightened policy must make them wish, for the aggrandizement and prosperity of the new republics, and for the consolidation among us of a system of government in harmony with theirs, we then ask again, how is it that more intimate relations are not established, under such circumstances?

Amidst so many national sympathies, and reciprocal interests, a spirit of distrust was excited, to the prejudice of both nations, when the means employed were intended to have quite a contrary effect; which proves how an indiscret zeal may be dangerous when those sympathies were on the point of producing mutual advantages the first minister plenipotentiary, appointed by the cabinet of Washington presented himself in Mexico; without a sufficient knowledge of the country, and of its actual situation, he conceives and form by himself a ridiculous system: he imagines that a foreign influence opposes the interests of his country; and directs the administration, which inclines towards an aristocracy that never existed in this country. Such are at least the motives which he alledged in several writings which he cannot deny, and which induced him to adopt a course as foreign to the duties of a minister as it was criminal in any society. His first acts are, if not to give birth, at least to give a new impulse to a secret society, which offering all the ressources of reduction extends itself rapidly everywhere, and admitting in its bosom all the U. States the injury to believe them capable of an unjust usurpation, which would give a natural blow to their reputation, would be contrary to their principles, and would endanger that peace the source of their prosperity. We have approved, it is true, the measures which have been taken, because they were necessary for the interior safety of the colony. It has been stated even in the papers of the U. S. that great disorder existed among the new population of Texas, for the want of an efficient police, and of respect for the authorities. The savages were renewing their attacks: the general quarters of the Spaniards were established in N. Orleans, from whence they insulted us, protected expeditions, and recruited soldiers: what was to be done? Send our national forces on the territory of the republic, and that conduct could give no cause for suspicion or distrust; such was the duty of government; we have approved those measures, and we advocate in the same manner all those which in our opinion can have a tendency to establish on solid basis friendship and harmony between the two nations.

Registro Oficial.

The President of the United States has recognised Archibald Willis Gordon, as Vice Consul of his Most Faithful Majesty, the King of Portugal, to reside at Mobile.

If the king England should die, his brother William Henry, Duke of Clarence, will succeed him.—George was born August 12, 1762. Of the Duke of Clarence, we find the following biography in vol. III. of Dr. Lieber's Encyclopædia Americana, just issued from the Press of Messrs. Carey & Lee, Philadelphia. The heir presumptive after the death of the Duke of Clarence, is the Princess Alexandrina Victoria, born May 24, 1819, daughter of the late Duke of Kent.

CLARENCE, Duke of, William Henry, Prince of England, second brother of King George IV, born August 21, 1765, was educated for the Navy, and passed through all the ranks, but received no command. In the House of Lords he constantly opposed the War policy of the Minister. He was indebted to him for his exertions for the abolition of the slave trade. His uniting with the opposition contributed to the overthrow of Pitt and Addington, but he still lived on the best terms with the royal family. He was passionately attached to the celebrated actress, Mrs. Jordan, with whom he was connected many years, and had several children by her. She died at Bordeaux in 1816. The Duke of Clarence conducted Louis XVIII. to the coast of France in 1814. He married the Princess Adelaide, of Saxe Meiningen, July 11, 1818, and was desirous of fixing his residence thenceforth at Osnabrück. He lives now with his wife in London.—In 1827, under Canning's administration, the Duke of Clarence was appointed Lord High Admiral of England, but he retire from that office soon after the Duke of Wellington had been made Premier.

We are pleased to see the general application bestowed on the seventh edition of "Smiley's Geography and Atlas," which has recently been issued from the bookstore of Mr. Grigg, of Philad. The work being printed and bound in the office connected with the printing establishment of this journal, we have reason to know that the orders for the publication have been so extensive, that notwithstanding near seven thousand copies of the present edition have been disposed of, the supply thus far has been insufficient to satisfy the demand. The following from the Portland Courier is in the same spirit with most of the articles that have appeared in the various journals throughout the country, in relation to this work.

"Smiley's Geography.—How the world goes on improving. In our school-boy days some twenty or five and twenty years ago, when we used to stand up in a row that reached clear across the school house and read from one end of the class to other those "never ending, still-beginning" stories of situation and extent, boundaries, climate, soil and productions," which run through Morse's old abridgment, together with the thousand jaw-breaking names, and all without map or question, we could not help thinking geography rather a dry affair. But now, such are the improvements of the age, geography is one of the most delightful and attractive of school exercises. We have received a copy of Smiley's easy introduction to Geography, with the accompanying maps, seventh edition, Philadelphia, have glanced over a part of it. It appears to contain some valuable improvements, which we have not noticed in other works. The work is accompanied by ten fine maps, prepared under towns in the U. States, and others are descriptive of the costume, manners and habits of the people of different countries. Mountains, rivers and cities are divided into six classes according to size, and are designated on the maps by figures. We think instructors, parents and school-committees, who are in want of geographies for their children or pupils, will do well to examine this work."
