FROM BUENOS AYRESS.

Advices of late dates had been received (through the Bandi Oriental) at Rio Grande the day previous to the sating of the Francis Partidge. No alteration in the position of either of the belligirent parties was reported. "Rosss" had improved the opportunity afforded by the quietness of the combined forces, since she engagement of the 20th Novémber, by putting in a more defensive state the point shacked at that time. It was reported that several vessels had detached the the state of the conveying squadrons, in consequence of a scarcity of provision, had the uniforable prospect of the success of the expedition. It was the general belief, that the undertaking would be abanduned, on account of the risk and detention in the average of the success of the expedition. The was the average of the account of the risk and detention in the average of the account of the risk and detention in the average of the account of the risk and detention in the average of the success of the expedition. The Buenos Ayreans had batteries on nearly every prominent point of the river, and great enthusiasm prevailed in Ross' Camp. The result of the engagement of the 25th November being considered as a viotory on their part, the combined forces having had so much the advantage on that occasion. Rosse' had made advantage on that occasion.
