THE EXCHEQUER.

The debate in the Senate of the United States upon the Exchequer Bill and Report of the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying it, is becoming extremely interesting. The speech of Mr. Mangum, on the 30th of Dec, in our opinion, presents the true character of the measure, as it came from the hands of the Secretary. In speaking of it in its political bearings, the distinguished senator from North Carolina used the following language:

"For a long week I have pondered the project, and have endeavored to divest my mind of every feeling but a desire to find the truth. I have viewed the proposed, not like the advocate who had written it in this report, but like an honest man, determined to do his duty. And I am compelled to come to the conclusion that even in the worst of times this Government had ever yet seen, never had there been so bold, so reckless a push for absolute power, as was now unblushingly made in the paper before the Senate. I repeat the assertion. Never, never, in the whole history of this Government, and there have witnessed a push so bold; or one which, if successful, must be attended with consequences so vast, and so disastrous to the liberties of this land. With a Government possessing a power of patronage which, even in the Golden bands, was of threatening aspect to liberty—a patronage which, spreading itself like a polypus, innumated its attenuated fibres through all the interstices of society, and by its tempting power, operating to subdue all that manliness of principle, that hardy virtue, which characterized our fathers—to propose to superadd to this threatening, this portentous amount of patronage the entire money power, and this to be managed and controlled at will by those hands which pull the wires and move the puppets of party—if I believed the country was prepared for such a measure as this, I should feel a depression of mind which nothing could cheer; I should look upon my children with tears, and despair of the welfare of my country for centuries to come."

This is precisely the view we gave of this stupendous project of a Government Bank, upon reading Mr. Forward's bill. It is a bold, daring push for absolute power, made under circumstances that, in the opinion of the administration no doubt, render the people an easy prey to their designs.

Of the commercial advantages to be derived from the Exchequer, we have forborne to speak. There seems to be much contrariety of opinion amongst business men as to whether commerce would be greatly aided by it; but paltry indeed and insignificant are the pecuniary easements it may afford, when brought into comparison with the tremendously dangerous power such an engine would give to the President. Imagine, for a moment, such a machine in the hands of an ambitious president; an institution possessing those features of a bank, which, in the present condition of our local banks, would at once give it the control of the whole of our internal trade, involving, in the space of a year, an amount of dealings that must be computed by hundreds of millions; with the power to loan money on bills of Exchange, and issue fifteen millions of notes, the President having the sole management and direction of its whole business: who could set bounds to its power?

It is idle to say that the bill imposes any restraint upon executive interference in the business of the Exchequer. The board of commissioners, to which its concerns are proposed to be entrusted, is to be established at Washington, under the shadow of the white house; of the five members who are to compose it, the secretary of the treasury and the treasurer are immediately removable by the president, without cause, and the other three are appointed by him, and removable for any offence or act that he may deem a sufficient cause for dismissal. The officers who manage the agencies throughout the union are to be appointed by the secretary of the treasury, who can remove them for such cause as may seem to him good; these officers owing their daily bread to the members of the board at Washington, who in turn are absolutely dependent upon the executive for theirs. If this is not to establish an executive bank, which confers upon the president unlimited power over the business of the country and the affairs of individuals, no machinery of human devising can do so. The executive may make money plenty or scarce as he may think fit. He may adopt the principle of rewarding his friends [of which Mr. Tyler has a good opinion] and punishing his enemies in the matter of discounts, and can crush through his agents any one who may gainsay his immaculacy.

In proposing to an American congress, a bill so pregnant with mischief, a plan so despotic in principle, the cabinet have counted largely upon the withering effects of misfortune upon the spirit of the people. This project is held out to the country in its pecuniary difficulties, as a bunker would tempt a starving man within his power by a show of bread. Under the specious guise of furnishing a national currency, the national liberties are sought to be clutched; and the bait that is prepared for the people is an issue of treasury notes which they themselves must redeem. The surplus production of labor, the exchangeable commodities of commerce are to be employed to oversaw the producer and enslave the merchant. The wing of the eagle is to feather the arrow with which he must be brought to the ground. And this is the scheme of an abstractionist!

AMERICAN CAPTIVES IN MEXICO.

The following preamble and resolutions were introduced into the House of Representatives of Kentucky, on the 1st instant, by the Hon. John Breed Barrin, and unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, it appears from authentic information, circulated in the United States, that passports from the government of the city of Mexico, dated the 7th of October, and countersigned by Santa Anna, with insolvent and peremptory insolence, ordering no resistance, have been arrested by a military band of Mexican desperadoes, a portion of them to death, and most unchristian manner whilst others, pent in manacles, were without any regard to the usages of all among civilized nations, or the universally received principles of humanity, having been first divested of their shoes and clothing and driven rather as beasts than human beings from the place of their departure, to the city of Mexico, a distance of many hundred miles, by a soldiery, cruel, relentless and unrestrained, and when there, their life-blood for death, or what is worse than death, their protracted bondage in chains, at the mercy will of a military decision, and to give a deeper interest if possible, for the fate of our unfortunate countrymen, that the blood of an American citizen is shed in cold blood and oppression throughout the globe.

And be it further resolved, That the Governor be requested to communicate forthwith the preamble and resolutions to the President of the United States, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.
