MAINE HAS A UTOPIA

IN THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW ENGLAND

By David M. Goodwin

The town of New Gloucester, Maine, is a community of about 2,500 people, located in the state's northwestern corner. It is known for its beautiful scenery, with rolling hills and vast forests, as well as its rich cultural heritage. The town is home to several historic landmarks, including the New Gloucester Historic District, which preserves the town's early 19th-century architecture. New Gloucester has a strong sense of community and is known for its vibrant arts scene, with a variety of galleries, theaters, and music venues. The town also has a number of parks and outdoor recreational areas, making it a popular destination for outdoor enthusiasts. Overall, New Gloucester is a charming and welcoming place to visit or call home.
