A number of men had been sitting on the floor the night before, talking politics and drinking beer. When the lights went out, they all went home, leaving the room empty.

Mr. Shanks, who had been lying in bed with a headache for the past two days, was surprised to hear someone knocking at the door. He got up and opened it to find a police officer standing outside.

"Mr. Shanks," said the officer, "you have been arrested for disturbing the peace." Mr. Shanks was taken to the police station, where he was charged with the crime.

Precious Stones and "Parties"

Author's Description Makes One Long Edes by Enid

I shall now refer to the first big event of the evening. It was when my husband and I entered the ballroom for the first time. We were greeted with a gust of cold air, but we soon warmed up to the festivities.

In the middle of the room was a large dance floor, which was surrounded by tables and chairs. The music was provided by a band, who played a variety of songs throughout the night.

The guests were dressed in their finest, with women wearing long gowns and men in suits. The atmosphere was lively and energetic, with people dancing and enjoying themselves.

I was most excited when my husband was invited to dance by a beautiful young woman. He accepted and they spent the rest of the evening on the dance floor, twirling and smiling.

When they were not wanted.

Some people seem to have difficulty understanding that I am not interested in parties or social events. It is just that I find them boring and uninteresting. I would rather stay home and read a book or watch TV.
