Pen-sketches from the London Night Sheds.

In the latter part of November, the police of London commenced to put in practice the system organized under the act of Parliament for providing "wayfarers, wanderers and foundlings" with lodgings for the night. A reporter of the London Daily News describes some of the scenes which afterwards ensued at one of the stations in the preliminary process of introduction to the hospitalities of the "Night Sheds" for sheltering the houseless and destitute. Night shades would, perhaps, more properly express the character of this nocturnal charity, judging from the sombre colors which predominate in a literal degree in the reporter's graphic but seemingly unembellished sketches
