UNCERTAINTIES.

The nomination of JOHN BELL and EDWARD EVERETT by the National Union Convention at Baltimore has produced one effect rarely witnessed in the political contests of this country. As a general rule, a studied effort is made by partisans to depreciate and disparage the choice made by their opponents—the war of principle too frequently degenerating into an ignoble assault on the private character of public men. On this occasion, however, we have been surprised and gratified, not merely at the total absence of all personal acrimony, but at the spontaneous, cordial and almost universal commendation bestowed upon the National Union candidates, and this, too, emanating as freely from Democratic subscribers as from the political supporters of the nominees.

Doubtless this liberal spirit is due in some measure to the unblemished reputation of Messrs. BELL and EVERETT. Although both of them have been many years in political life, they have escaped the rare happiness of escaping the envenomed tooth of slander. No stain rests upon their escutcheon. No foul accusation dims the spotless brilliancy of their career. Even the censorious and malignant, if such there be, can find no charge of perfidy, no taint of dishonor, to allege against them; but there is another reason for the kindly feeling with which the nominations have been received, and of contempt in the insolence and recklessness with which men now so deeply regret party ties. Politics in the south is nearly free from that extreme bitterness and uncompromising antagonism which marked it in former periods. Parties are in a transition state. Principles are well defined; distinctive lines of separation have become so nearly obliterated, that men scarcely know how they stand to-day, or where they will go to-morrow. The uncertainty of the future, political position, the possibility that circumstances may require them to sustain candidates to whose tenets they have been long and ardently opposed, the reluctance that there is no positive steadiness in their present party associations—all combine to diminish the citizens of the expediency of placing aside the old beacon of political sovereignty and district.

While, however, BELL and EVERETT are greeted with so much kindliness, and the opinion is every where expressed that better men and truer patriots could not well have been selected, it becomes the impartial and independent chronicler of the times to guard the reader from the too rapid inference that the conservative nominees are to distance all competitors, or even to secure so large a proportion of the popular suffrages. He would be a rash and thoughtless man who, in the existing conjuncture of affairs, would undertake to predict the amount of support these nominations will receive. We have been frequently interrogated on this point, and have uniformly offered the same reply. It is beyond mortal ken even to form an approximate estimate of the strength of the Union candidates until after the other parties shall have definitively concluded their actions. Just look at the uncertainty of the future. In the first place the great Democratic party is apparently rent asunder—the North and part of the South forming one wing, the rest of the South forming the other. Two Conventions are to be called—one at Richmond, another at Baltimore. The split has been made ostensibly on the slavery question—it is confessedly doubtful whether a compromise can be effected and harmony restored. If the two Conventions continue at loggerheads, and nominate separate candidates, the extensive power of the Democracy will be utterly destroyed, and its influence upon the legions who are wont to respond to its call will be annihilated. Under such circumstances it would not be at all astonishing to see large separations of the conservative elements of the party and especially of that numerous band of Old Line Whigs, who, despairing of the revival of their old organization, have generally acted with the Democrats. A host of natural Union loving men would, in this event, rally around the standard of BELL and EVERETT, believing it would cause foolish quasi abolitionism in a Democrat by the people and would be anxious that their interests should stand an equal chance before the House of Representatives. Nevertheless, these calculations may be totally upset by the reconciliation of the Northern and Southern Democracy. Should this take place, seven eighths of the voters in the South would, in our opinion, stand by the Democratic nominees as the only available means of defeating the Black Republicans.

From this it may be easily understood how materially the fortunes of the Union candidates are likely to be affected by the course which the Democracy will pursue—especially so far as the South is concerned. But this is not all. The spectacle of strength which the Union ticket may exhibit at the North will greatly depend upon the combinations to be made by the Black Republican Convention which will assemble at Chicago to morrow. There are in the ranks of that organization thousands of citizens who sustain it from opposition to Democracy, rather than from any marked attachment to anti-slavery principles. The influential body of voters may be reunited if the Chicago Convention selects some candidate not utterly odious to Northern conservatives—some one such apparent, for example, as BATES or MCLEAN, but if that Convention carries out its legitimate doctrines by nominating either the "irrepressible conflict" candidate himself, or one of his kidney, such as CHASE or BANKS, we are inclined to believe that the Northern conservative element will detach itself from Black Republicanism, and embrace BELL and EVERETT.

These considerations, meagre, vague and general as they are, will suffice to explain the impossibility of ascertaining at this early stage of the canvass the prospects of the National Union candidates. All opinions on the subject are premature, and in fact mere guess work. It is quite natural that enthusiastic partisans should make their own selections, and consequently should cherish courage in hope none the less confident because there are contrabands; but cool-headed and experienced observers will not dream of counting themselves by predictions which at this time, would be without the slightest data for their realization.

Effect of Political Agitation in the Stock Market.

Just now, as will be seen by the stock list, the bulls on Wall street are beginning to breathe. All sorts of securities are looking up, and there is no fear but the bonds of the Southern States, which are largely held at the North. The Southern State stocks sold here were Tennessee, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Missouri, Louisiana and Georgia. The South Carolina debt is in the hands of English capitalists. All the bonds which have been withdrawn from the market since the commencement of the Democratic party in Charleston. This state of things will cause the market ought to teach a lesson to the public, who are continually crying out that the country is going to perdition unless such and such men are elected to office. Let the people of the South, who are constantly crying out that the Union is in danger, look at home, and see if there is not more danger from their own political differences than from any other cause. Let them look at the effect which the agitation of the slavery question has had upon the value of their property. Are the negroes worth as much as they were before the Union was split by the Democratic party? Are the lands worth as much? Is there as much money in circulation? Is there as much business done? Is there as much confidence between man and man? Is there as much prosperity in the land? Let the people look at these questions, and ask themselves whether they have been benefited by the agitation of the slavery question, and whether they are willing to continue it. If they are, they will continue to vote for the disorganizers and destructives of the Democratic party. But if they are not willing to see the country ruined, they will vote for conservative men, who will stand by the Constitution and the Union.

A WOMAN ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY FIVE YEARS OLD.—Died in this town, near the village of Mendon, Monroe county, last week, Susan Wade, in the 125th year of her age. She was born in the family of a Mrs Barrett, in Middletown, Conn. In an interview we had with her, a few days before her death, she particularly alluded to some of the leading events of the French war of 1756—7. She said she recollected the massacre at Fort William Henry by the French and Indians, under Montcalm, and the fall of Wolfe at Quebec. In reply to a question as to her age at that time, she said she did not know her age at that time, but added she had been told she was as large as now—"a good looking girl, that burned through with her fast work." She was married in August, 1757, and the battle on the plains of Abraham was in September, 1759. From Middletown she went to Washington, County of Washington, where she went with the family of Judge Painter, to Middlebury, Vt. She lived in this family for several years and for the last nineteen years she has been living in the family of Mr. Bell, whose wife was the daughter of an adopted daughter of Judge Painter. She was born free, has always enjoyed equal health, except an attack of rheumatism, which caused her to stump one shoulder, and until a year ago she could see to read and write very well without spectacles. Her mental faculties at present seem quite distinct, though not able to arrange them readily in chronological order, and she would frequently confound the events of the French and Revolutionary wars.—Rochester Democrat.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

The Coming Exhibition.—The sixth grand Annual sports in New Orleans, which is to be held on Sunday and Monday, May 20th and 21st, promises to be a grand success. Everything is being done to render the occasion more than usually attractive. The ground selected is an excellent place for the occasion, and is in a delightful locality, being situated on the shell road, within a few minutes' walk of the cars. The Fair Association will offer a number of premiums over those given in the past, and the Committee of Arrangements are determined that the exhibition shall be one of the most attractive ever held in this city, while the fleeting road makes it convenient for those who prefer traveling to private vehicles. Parties desirous of visiting the grounds can leave the cars at the Metairie road depot, and at the grounds there will be various musical instruments, dancing grounds, and every thing to amuse and delight those who may visit the exhibition. The admission to the ground is fifty cents, and we hope to see a large attendance to be benefited by the occasion. The committee of arrangements will be found in attendance at the depot on the day of the exhibition, to receive visitors and direct them to the grounds.
