GIVING A MAN A CHANCE.
In Savannah, according to the Savannah Morning News, a man who was previously convicted of a non-violent offense has been given a second chance. The man, who had served time in prison for possession of a controlled substance, was released early under a program that allows for early parole for certain low-level offenders. The program is seen as a way to reduce recidivism and improve public safety.

HOW WOMEN CHOOSE STUDIES.
In the New York Times, a study has been published that explores the factors that influence women's choices when selecting a college major. The study found that women are more likely to choose majors that align with their interests and values, such as liberal arts and education, while men are more likely to choose majors that align with their career aspirations, such as engineering and business. The study highlights the importance of providing women with opportunities to explore a wide range of majors and careers.

BRITAIN'S IRISH FAD.
Britain's interest in Irish culture and mythology has been on the rise, according to The Guardian. This interest has been fueled by a growing desire for cultural exchange and the desire to explore the rich history and traditions of Ireland. The interest has been particularly strong in young people, who are drawn to the tales of Ireland's legendary heroes and the beauty of its natural landscapes.

END TO ATTITUDE RACKS.
In the Los Angeles Times, a law has been passed to end the use of attitude racks in schools. This law was prompted by concerns about the impact of these racks on students' mental health, as well as the limited educational value they provide. The law mandates that attitude racks be phased out over the next three years, with schools transitioning to more positive and educational approaches to student feedback.
