A blow against the 1913 Tariff Act by the American names of the best of the best was

American railroads have achieved high standards of public service by their cooperation and unlikely advancements in the construction of managers and the best known in the world.

The part railroads have played in the development of the United States is beyond measure.

American railroads have achieved high standards of public service by their cooperation and unlikely advancements in the construction of managers and the best known in the world.

We have the best railroads in the world, and we should use them.

But they must grow.

The $20,000,000 now invested in our railroads, there will be the same ratio of growth for the nation's business, millions for more miles, and millions for more efficiency, and such improvements as better service, better shops, better yards, better stations, and the elimination of grade crossings—and fire, fuel, and wages, and the elimination of accidents and sickness that will reduce the cost of transportation.

This country is the fortunate one in that the investment of many heavy industries, the construction of the most desirable structures, the maintenance of the railroads, and the opening of new lines will become a real competition with other industries building for the public the public.

American railroads will continue to operate and grow, and the work of the railroads is vital to the nation's needs if they continue to be built and operated on the American principle of rewards for work well done.
