We continue receipts to arrive pretty freely, and with an increasing trade, the rates for some of the leading Grain and Provisions, have given way a trifle, while no upward tendency in Prices have checked the demand for export, and confined it to a limited scale, particular of the former. To-day's movement has generally worn a heavy appearance, although claiming prices above the views of most English buyers, and the transactions so confined chiefly to the domestic and Continental trade—The stock is consequently large. Sugars and Molasses have met with a fair demand, but the arrivals are not on
