In my last I told you the Prussians, Saxons, and Swedes, were in every operation. Our enemies have also entered the Province of Lower Silesia and have established a strong position at the town of Gnadenfrei, which is East of the Elbe River. This success, according to the report of the last date, was followed by the evacuation of Wroclaw, which has now fallen into our hands. The town was burnt to the ground by our troops, who then retired to the vicinity of Poznan.

As the newspaper is already in bed, I shall not trouble you with a description of the operations near Poznan. The town was captured after a siege of ten days, and the garrison and the whole population were taken prisoners. The town was afterwards burned and the inhabitants were expelled. The inhabitants of Poznan are now preparing to repair the damage caused by the fire.

The following dispatch was received by the War Office:

"The town of Poznan has been captured by our troops. The garrison and the inhabitants were taken prisoners. The town was afterwards burned and the inhabitants were expelled. The inhabitants of Poznan are now preparing to repair the damage caused by the fire."
