[illegible] Mail, hailed yesterday from [illegible]

FRENCH REPUBLICANISM

[illegible] news of the civil French revolution [illegible] country, revolutions congenial [illegible] French character, overthrow of Royalty and the [illegible] Republican Government were [illegible] the United States Senate. The theme was a popular one, and few Senators but [illegible] hand enough to start an objection to its passage. Among the dissentients, however, was that most intrepid and independent of statesmen—JOHN C. CALHOUN. He condemned the resolution as premature, and [illegible] sense was not whether France [illegible] successfully [illegible] a republic, and [illegible] whether her people were fitted by education [illegible] habit and restraint for the [illegible] of her government. Mr. Calhoun's sagacity was not at fault. He [illegible] with that inner eye of reason [illegible] gaze undismayed by prejudice, was [illegible] serenely and unerring. Events have [illegible] his apprehensions. The Republican [illegible] of France has become all but a mockery [illegible] a reword.

It is almost too [illegible] to enquire whether the changes [illegible] have been gradually wrought in the [illegible] of the French people, by which her Constitution [illegible] been progressively stripped of nearly [illegible] Democratic features, are the result of an [illegible] upon the organization of the Government, or the effect of the [illegible] and misfortunes [illegible] the French people. A certain [illegible] and [illegible] show that both these [illegible] contributed to alienate the republican [illegible] from the Government, and to [illegible] in the minds of the [illegible] by which it was [illegible] by every [illegible] popular freedom. Of the [illegible] to be no doubt will never. Almost [illegible] since with the election of Louis Napoleon [illegible] event is itself significant of a blind [illegible] to the name he bore, at variance [illegible] with [illegible], and subservient [illegible] the views of a republican [illegible] [illegible] of the Empire.
