The Kenyon Megas refers to the Gainsborough Run Firm of the Manchester United Faithful.

They were formed in April 2008 when attempting to check in for a flight to Milan for the Champions League Quarter Final involving AC Milan v Manchester United at the San Siro.

Whilst handing over the passports, one member of the firm was asked if they were "Kenyon" at first they thought the airline was merely conducting a simple survey and had made a genuine mistake in accusing them of being African Origin - moments later they realised the airline simply wanted to know if they were the Kenyon family.

Whilst on the tarmac at Manchester Airport, taking full advantage of the " Full Representation Throughout" policy, Man United representatives announced that the majority of train tickets from Roma to Milan had been purchased by the so called Roma Ultras, and thus warned ALL united fans to stay away from the station once they arrived.

The Kenyon Megas were born

Arriving at 12pm Milan Time, they headed straight for the station to sort out any ultras and teach them a lesson, only to find no ultras there. It was at that moment the firm headed into the square in Milan and stumbled accross Bar Duomo with its infamous toilet fountain spiral staircase, that proved a hit with the younger manchester faithful.
