FRIDAY MORNING, AUGUST 22, 1845.

HOAXING.

There is a cowardly and contemptible practice prevalent in some parts of the country, called "Hoaxing." Its object seems to be little better than an attempt by some stupendous falsehood, to harrow up the feelings of the community, and strike large numbers of persons into a state of affright and dismay. There are few things more culpable and villainous than such abominable efforts, which are put forth chiefly for the gratification of private malice or from an inherent love of mischief. There is such a thing as an innocent mystification—a sort of imposition palmed upon society for the purpose of exciting mirth, and which neither in its character nor consequences, is fraught with the slightest evil. Such, for instance, was the celebrated "Moon Hoax" by LOCKE—a most clever, ingenious and amusing invention, by a man of ready fancy and marked intellectual power, and which challenged the admiration even of those who were deceived by its apparent earnestness of tone and plausibility of detail. It is not, however, of such hoaxes that we would speak; but of those dreadful stories of murder, death, steamboat explosions and frightful disasters, which from time to time, are paragraphed by reckless individuals, find their way into the columns of respectable journals, are therefore believed, and create universal alarm and sorrow, until exposed and exploded. The authors of these inexcusable falsehoods ought, whenever it is practicable, to be diligently sought after, and rendered amenable to the severest penalties which our statute books may provide.

Our attention to this subject was aroused from casually glancing at a St. Louis paper, and perceiving that some graceless knave had started a report in that city that the steamer Harry of the West had burst her boiler and was totally lost. On enquiry it was found that the whole story was a hoax. Doubtless its perpetrator with a stupidity only equalled by his recklessness, imagined that in fabricating so infamous a tale, he was exhibiting a remarkable proof of cleverness. We fancy a taste of prison discipline for a few months, and a heavy fine, would diminish somewhat his self-conceit.

Hoaxes of the kind referred to are becoming so frequent, that the conduct of a newspaper scarcely knows whether to credit one-half the accounts of accidents, deaths, murders, &c., which he meets with in his exchanges. Take an example or two:—Some time since the Syracuse (N. Y.) Star, contained the notice of Mrs. SARAH HALE, who was said to have expired suddenly on her way home from Illinois to Massachusetts. After due enquiry by her brother it turns out that she is still living and was in New York while her friends were mourning her as dead. What does the originator of this despicable falsehood merit?

A few weeks ago, we, in common with nearly the whole press throughout the country, were induced to publish the account of a fatal accident at Ithaca, New York, caused by the bursting of a cannon used in celebrating the 4th of July, and which, it was stated, had killed three individuals. There was not, however, a syllable of truth in the whole story. Some few days since the papers were again hoaxed into the publication of a notice of an alarming rebellion among the students of Trinity College, Hartford. It was one of the most plausible inventions we have ever seen. It lacked but one ingredient—truth. The Geneva duel hoax was the last in order, and we suppose before the expiration of a month the press will again be fooled into the publication of some dreadful or marvellous occurrence, and so on to the end of the chapter.

Laws exist for the punishment of libellers and slanderers; and there is no class whose means of mischief are more extensive and deplorable than the Hoaxers.—The only remedy is to fight them—especially from a power weaker than our own—compel me to disavow and reprove your conduct, as set forth in the charge and specifications of which you have been found guilty.

This letter of reprimand will be published in a general order.

I am, respectfully, &c.
GEORGE BANCROFT.

Capt. PHILIP F. VOORHEES,
United States Navy.

FATAL AFFRAY.—The Richmond Enquirer says that on Saturday night, in consequence of some difficulty arising between John Schoolcarger and Thomas F. Wesley, the former procured a gun, pursued and fired at the latter, (at the distance of about thirty yards, while riding through Rocketts,) who received the whole discharge of shot in the region of the heart, causing immediate death. Schoolcarger had warned a sister of Wesley—thereby becoming interested in the estate of the father of the deceased. He had previously threatened to take the life of the deceased, as the administrator of the estate. The murderer had been arrested, and was undergoing an examination previous to being committed to jail.

LONDON LANCET.—We acknowledge from Messrs. Burgess, Stringer & Co., publishers, the receipt of the August number of the American republication of the London Lancet. To the members of the medical profession it is wholly unnecessary to say a word in commendation of this admirable periodical. The American edition is an exact transcript of the original, and is furnished at a far cheaper price.

MADAME CASTELLAN.—The New Orleans public are well acquainted with the merits of this charming cantatrice. We copy from a late letter of WILLIS, an account of her appearance in one of Mozart's Operas—"Cosi fan tutte."

"I was curious to see our favorite Castellan on the stage, for, in New York we had only an opportunity of admiring her in concert. She was to play the part of Fiordiligi in the opera of "Cosi fan tutte," (as all women do.) The opera is Mozart's, but it quite takes this supposition out of the question which one cannot help making of a stranger, to see what sons-in-law he married his delicious music. Two sisters are betrothed to two officers, and the first scene opens with Leporello's laughing at the young men's belief, that their sweethearts will be constant to them. A bet of a hundred zequins is laid by the old philosopher, that he will prove them to be no better than all other women—ready, that is to say, for the same encounter. To decide the bet, the two lovers pretended to be ordered off to the wars, take a heart-rending leave of their ladyloves, and return immediately in disguise, each one making love to the other's mistress. The fair ones prove inconstant, sign agreements of marriage with the new comers, and when the plot is discovered, quietly change back again and marry as is first agreed upon—the last part all offence most expeditiously forgiven and forgotten! Fanny Meyers ready to write his "Requiem" after putting music to such a fiasco as the sex!

I did not recognize Castellan when she first came on the side scenes, she is so changed in her appearance. Her outer shell of plump sluggishness is entirely removed, as if the removal of flesh had disclosed the spirituality. She is somewhat less beautiful about the neck and shoulders, much more beautiful in countenance and action. Still, though one plays with expression and grace, she lacks one quality of an actress—that capability of locomotory in herself, without which it cannot be represented in a stage character. Never was anything more convincingly in earnest than Fiordiligi's first refusal to listen to a new lover—never was anything more ill-done and palpably against the grain, than her yielding at last to her lovers persuasions. Any body in the theatre would have insured Mad. Castellan the turn-off the stage, do her best—would never call such a thing. Madame Rita Korio, on the contrary, who represented the other betrothed sister, played the yielding much better than the resisting.

Castellan has not sung in all the capitals of Europe without improving as a singer. She has filled up the previous to her throat, so to speak, and in listening to her, now, you do not come to those places where the ear is caught and left wandering for a note or two, as if something was there then required something, either to be comprehended or sought. These acquisitions seem to the former but most enjoyable luxuries of the contralto, for which Castellan was so instantly applauded in our country, and with great effect last night, and indeed, the audience seemed eager to applaud her whenever there was an opportunity. One thing we lost by her appearing fully in concerts—her audience which finds its way somehow to the ear, for her voice sounded sweeter after opening it."

☞ The London Globe tells in the most laughably serious style imaginable, the following story of the Duke of Wellington's being in the most imminent peril from the attempt of a man to lapel His Grace a letter in the streets of London. We copy the story with the ravishing commentary of the N. Y. Express:

"On Monday evening, at a quarter before 5, (Mark the ludicrous particularity of the thing!) upon the arrival at the Duke of Wellington at the House of Lords, a man, described as a tall man, with a tall and slight form, of rather decent appearance, about 42 years of age, (How important how old he was!) rushed towards His Grace's carriage, as opposed her when about to alight from the carriage of the Queen Dowager, without pausing about this hour at the entrance of the house to see the flowers, and was in the act of thrusting a letter upon His Grace, (As if it were a poisoned or pistol!) when the two Sergeants-at-Arms who were in attendance, pushed him back. He was at once apprehended by two constables on duty, and taken into custody. He appeared for a moment highly excited, but the face of the individual I but paid no attention to the matter, and proceeded into the house. The man was conveyed to the station-house, and upon his person was found a letter addressed to the Duke of Wellington, which was delivered to His Grace, and which contained a petition, &c., &c., &c."
