THE BEE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED DAILY BY JEROME BAYON.
FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 27, 1832.

GOVERNOR.
J. B. DAWSON.

The mail furnishes regular dates, but contrary to general anticipation, no news from Europe. Our readers must have patience, as we cannot be much longer without advices. The Bolivar, we understand, is at the Balize; besides which, vessels are expected at New York which will doubtlessly bring late dates.

The northern mail, by a new arrangement, will close at six o'clock in the morning, instead of six o'clock in the evening.

The force of truth has at length triumphed over the sectional opinions of the mayor. In the last sitting of the city council the subject of the removal of the city prison was decided, notwithstanding Mr. [illegible]. The mayor in his message sending back the resolution, expressed the opinion that the council had stated the question without bestowing upon it sufficient reflection. To this Mr. Canon observed, very correctly, we think, that the want of reflection was altogether on the part of "his honor," as the resolutions which he sent back so inconsiderately, had been adopted unanimously, and that this was conclusively to show that he must have thought his judgment entitled to more consideration than that of the whole body of the city council. The question, upon being put to vote, was decided as we have said, and the mayor's veto thrown out by two thirds of the council. Rather a decisive vote indeed! The gentlemen who voted in the affirmative were Messrs. Morgan, Pierce, Blance, Canon, Thomas, Caballut and Foret;—those in the negative were Messrs. Culbertson, Lallande and Baldwin.

Disclaiming as we do, the wish to call an alderman to account for his vote, we cannot but remark the singularity of the apparent alliance between a representative of the lower interests and two of those of the upper. Did Mr. Culbertson expect to receive, when he might ask for something for the section of the city which he represented, less support from the members with whom he divided, than with those whom he joined? It cannot be excite surprise that he should differ in opinion with so great a majority on a question, the general utility of which was not even disputed.

The resolutions passed have now become binding on the mayor; he can suggest no reasonable excuse for delaying to carry them into effect.

The mayor, in his veto message, mentions the necessity of consulting with the police jury; we cannot see what that body has to do with the purchasing of a lot by the corporation. Will the official inform us?

LATE FROM VERA CRUZ.

We learn from Capt. YOUNG, of the brig Sparta, which arrived late last evening from Vera Cruz, that the besieging army had commenced cannonading that city. Flour had fallen from twenty dollars to eight. The last sale of cattle took place shortly before our informant left. They had become so very scarce that there were hardly any in the market on the 18th inst. the day on which the Spark sailed.

LATE FROM PERU AND CHILI.—The editors of the Journal of Commerce have been favored with the following letter, dated

LIMA, January 23, 1832.

We regret to inform you that the brig Anaconda met with some difficulties which retarded her arrival for several days. After having passed Cape Horn without meeting any obstacles, capt. Palmer touched at the Island of Juan Fernandez principally with a view to get a supply of water. It appears that some prisoners were confined on the Island, and amongst them many officers and soldiers who had been formerly engaged in a revolution against the Chilian government. Captain Palmer not being aware of this circumstance, landed with some men without suspicion, but soon after was seized and confined in a cavern. The prisoners demanded of him to carry them away from the Island; and as capt. Palmer resisted, they threatened his life by pointing loaded muskets at him. Perceiving his life and the lives of his men in danger, he at last consented, and about 120 or 130 men embarked. They did not allow capt. Pelmer to take in water, being afraid that some vessel of war or troops might come from Valparaiso and prevent their escape.

As soon as the prisoners had embarked, they forced the captain to steer south, it being their intention to land at the Island of St. Mary, south of Conception. However, the wind being contrary, they changed their determination, and compelled the captain to land them at Coriapo. They plundered some part of the cargo, but did not otherwise ill-treat the captain or crew, and permitted them to depart. The U. S. ship Falmouth, and an English vessel of war, were preparing to sail for Juan Fernandez, but this measure will be unnecessary.

At present flour remains a prohibited article. Government is constantly becoming more convinced of the ill effects of the prohibitions, as many of the goods are clandestinely introduced. The chamber of deputies at the last session repealed these prohibitions, but the senate have not as yet concurred, and the executive does not dare to suspend the law—such an interference with the constitution having been one cause of the expulsion of the late vice president—though on several other points they are not very scrupulous about the constitution.

New York, April 12.

FROM COLOMBIA.—By the brig Elizabeth we have Bogota papers to the 23d Feb. Their contents are unimportant.

A letter of the 10th says that in 15 days the constitution would be adopted, and the new magistrates chosen.

BOGOTA, Feb. 23.—It is with much pleasure we publish to-day the formal and solemn pronunciamiento of the important district of Pasayan, by which it self anew with the republic of New Grenada, to which it always belonged.

The fluctuations in the literary taste of the reading communities in our several cities, forcibly remind us of the importance to every country in which letters are cultivated, or at all likely to be promoted, of some one great and accredited mark to which, as to a source, fine minds may repair, excited at once of that profit and reward which, combined, furnish to genius the only true and adequate incentives to exertion. Patronage at Athens and Rome, in spite of their vast foreign possessions, was confined and concentrated within the walls of the single city, sovereign alike in literature and in arms. The capital of Greece awarded the honors either literary or political, to the people north of Pindus, a distance of little more than two hundred miles. In modern times; in Italy, notwithstanding the munificence of her princes and her cities, although Ferrara conserved, as it were, within her own bosom the whole force and fervor of literature and the arts, in spite of the generous devotion of the house of Este the same high and holy cause, the vastly magnificent of the most illustrious family of which Europe, whether ancient or modern, can boast; what, after all, was the fate and what the history of Dante, Tasso, Alfieri and others? Tasso's great Epic, extolled in one city, was arraigned, disparaged and denounced in another. Dante driven into exile, wandered a fugitive over his own Italy; and Alfieri, although tolerably successful as a dramatic writer, led a restless and wasteful life, knowing not where to fix either his personal residence, or his literary hopes. Such, if we mistake not, is destined to be the history of the literary men of this country. Statesmen will clog the avenues to fame; genius will shrink back indignant and disgusted, taking up its abode on more congenial shores; while a worthless literature, barren and shortlived as the thistles of the Pampas, will be in returns as the theme of some future "Curse [illegible]." Charleston Courier.

TREATY WITH [illegible]—NAVAL AND MILITARY.—Presentation of Pistols.—Instances of [illegible] presentiments have been more uncommon, than [illegible] never heard of [illegible] striking than the following two:

Lieut. Herbert had been many years in the service, and had for some time commanded the Wasp sloop-of-war, a beautiful model of war craft known on the Lisbon station in 1809, &c. where she was principally employed in conveying government freights. He was afterwards appointed to the Harlequin, of eighteen guns, on the Newfoundland station; this appointment was given him with a view to his promotion. People follow, if he was not promoted, he was at any rate provided for.

He was first lieutenant of the little vessel, and during the time that he held this station, was distinguished by that gentlemanly behavior and urbanity of manner, so much to be desired in those who possess almost unlimited power. From the time of his first joining her, however, he seemed to think of death, and frequently declared, that he had never yet been in an action of any kind, although so long in the service, and that he felt convinced, most fully in his mind, that when he did get in one, he should fall.

Many a long and weary hour in the night-watches on the banks of Newfoundland, has he wiled away by reciting all his former prospects, and his future hopes; but it invariably wound up with his taking a longer siesta than usual, and declaring as he finished his yarn, "If ever I go into action, I shall fall—well, be all right—keep a good look out there, forward;" this was the hint that he wanted no more conversation, and the time of his watch used to leave him and go over to leeward. Poor Stewart would then pace the deck in the most perfect mental abstraction. He had indeed a most melancholy foreboding of his fate, but he met it like a hero.

It was in the latter part of 1813, or the beginning of 1814, when the Harlequin, not far from Bermuda, fell in with one of our own packets, and from some mistake in the signals, the packet took her for an American ship which she had heard was in those seas, and let fly a raking broadside at her as she was coming up on her quarter; while the Harlequin was getting into carronade range, the packet continued to fire at her, principally from a long brass gun, which she had mounted abaft, and which was directed by a passenger, an artillery officer.

Poor Stewart was in the act of walking aft, apparently in the highest glee, and cheering the crew with the hopes of soon having her alongside, when one of those raking shots came in at the starboard gangway, walked away with the back part of his head, and his brains literally flew up to the peak of the main-sail; it took another man's shoulder off, and then went out through the poop.

There was many a wet eye, the next day, when

"The corse was made his watering sleep."

A still more remarkable instance was that of Lieut. Bissett, of the royal marine artillery, who was put in 1816 to Algiers in his majesty's bomb Infernal. He over and over again stated, even before the fleet got to Gibraltar, that he well knew he should "be one of the first;" and after sailing from that place, passed his time principally in devotion, visible outside his cabin. Latterly he said but little to any one, and on the morning of the battle, he several times repeated that he knew he should be the one of the first. With the exception of this, he hardly spoke on that day, unless to give the necessary directions at the mortars. In the action began at about two o'clock in the afternoon, and he was in the act of aiming either the fourth or fifth shell, when the fatal shot struck him.

Before this he had been a good deal cut up; she had her spring shot away, boats swamped, and was severely raked for some time. During all this, he remained calmly waiting for death with the cool yet determined resolution of a gallant spirit, who knows his last hour is come. I never could imagine what part of a missile it was that ended his mortal career. He was cut in three pieces.

A London Star on entering the treasury of the theatre, and demanding the arrears of his enormous salary, a proprietor thus addressed him: "You really, Mr. ——, ought to remember that you have not drawn during the whole season." "Very true," was the reply, "and therefore, as it is time to begin, I come to draw now."

GREAT FISHING.—Captain Green, of the ship Phenix, arrived at Bog Harbor, states that after filling all her oil casks, he started overboard hogsheads of bread, rice, vinegar, &c. for the purpose of making use of the casks for oil; and when all filled, as well as the men's bags, he was obliged to throw the residue of oil overboard! On this and the preceding voyage, captain Green has been absent 18 months and 20 days, and brought into port two cargoes, equal to 6200 barrels whale oil, and 40,000 lbs. bone.

Parker read a part of Washington Irving's new Sketch Book, the scene of which is Spain, the most romantic of European countries, and the best known by the gifted author. His style has little nothing of its peculiar charm; his descriptions are graphic as usual, and enlivened with racy anecdotes and happy reflection. We shall probably soon furnish a specimen of this work, from the whole of which we expect gratification.—Natchez Gaz.

"One day," said Massena, being at Buccingen, I perceived a young soldier belonging to the light artillery, whose horse had just been wounded by a lance. The young man, who appeared quite a child, defended himself desperately, as several bodies of the enemy lying around him could testify. I immediately despatched an officer with some men to his assistance, but they arrived too late. Although this action had taken place on the borders of the wood, and in front of the bridge, the artillery man had alone withstood the attack of the small troop of Cossacks and Bavarians, whom the officer and men I despatched immediately put to flight. His body was covered with wounds inflicted by shot, lances and swords. They were at least thirty. And do you know, madame, who this young officer was, said Massena, turning to me. "A woman! Yes, a woman! and a handsome woman too! although she was covered so with blood, that it was difficult to judge of her beauty. She had followed her lover to the army. The latter was a captain of artillery; she never left him; and when he was killed, defended like a lioness, the remains of him she had so ardently loved. She was a native of Paris; her name was Louise Bellet, and she was the daughter of a fringe maker in the rue du Petit Lion."—Memoirs of the Duchess Abrantes in the Athenæum.

THE FOREIGN PRESS.—Journals are at present increasing in all parts of the world with the most surprising rapidity. It is curious enough to see newspapers from Algiers and Constantina, and published by the French, the other under the direction of the Grand Turk, who, in the present age is of liberal principles. The negroes of Liberia have also their newspapers, and the last intelligence received from Swan River states the manuscript journal, heretofore the only literary work of the colony, has been replaced by a printed journal, the publication of which commenced in May last. Not content with the journals Jan Jahan Numa, published by Hiree Hur Dutter, Soodhakur, Pookhakur, Hurkara, and others to the number of nine, all published by the natives, a tenth has just appeared, written half in Persian and half in Bengalee. Another paper, to be called the Ispiac Gazette, will shortly be published at Cuttack, in the Bengalee, Persian and eastern languages. The principal subject with which these journals are taken up is the suttees, a question upon which the most opposite opinions exist. In Australia also, two new journals have very lately made their appearance, namely, the Sidney Herald, and Life in Sidney.—French paper.

To clean black lace veils.—These are cleaned by pinning them through a warm liquor of bullock's gall and water, after which they must be rinsed in cold water; then cleaned for stiffening as follows: Take a small piece of glue, about the size of a bean, pour boiling water upon it, which will dissolve it, and when dissolved pass the veil through it, and clap it between your hands.

The New Hampshire Patriot says—"It is remarkable that there has never been a conviction for the crime of perjury in this state, with the exception of a solitary instance, and this happened from the upbraidings of a man's conscience. He had been hired to swear—the cause was gained by his testimony. He subsequently presented himself to the court, acknowledged his guilt and thought he deserved punishment. He was indicted and is now in the state prison.

Extract of a letter dated Green Bay, February 9: "The small pox is making dreadful ravages among the Indians along the western shore of Lake Michigan. As many as sixty had died of this malady at Milwaukie, up to the last accounts."

TOBACCO TRADE.—We understand, that the French government has finally determined to abandon the idea of the contract system, and to continue that of the Colbeurs. The Regie [that is the administrative department, to whom is committed the power of buying the tobacco, having it manufactured, and then depositing the manufactured tobacco in different towns for sale for the benefit of the government] has issued a notice, under date of 7th January, stating "approximately the amount of the purchase it proposes to make, which may be as follows:
